In the second Book, after having justify'd himself for advising the expedition of the Croisade, which had been unsuccessful; he admonishes Pope Eugenius to consider as to his Person, who he is, and as to the Dignity of his Profession, what he is. First he is to reflect whence he is descended, which may serve to abate his Pride. He gives him to understand, that he is not set over others, to domineer over them, but to be their Minister and watch over them; that if this Dignity has procur'd him great Riches, he is not to think they belong to him by the right of Apostleship, since St. Peter had no power to dispose of what he never enjoyed: That he indeed had given him the charge of all Churches, but not an arbitrary Dominion over them, which he expressly forbids, and the Gospel disallows. That the same Person cannot well execute the Civil Government and the Papacy, and therefore he who grasps at both, ought justly to lose both. In a word, he advises him particularly to avoid being haughty on account of his Supremacy, "for (says he) you are not supremely perfect by being supream Bishop, and take notice, that if you think your self so, you are the worst of Men. But let us consider you, as you stand in the Church of God, and what Figure you make. You are the Chief Priest, the Sovereign Pontiff, the first among the Bishops, the Heir of the Apostles, Abel in Priority, Noah in Government, &c. 'Tis to you that the Keys of Heaven have been entrusted, and to whom the Care of the Flock has been committed; but there are other Door-keepers of Heaven, and other Pastors besides you; yet you are so much the more above them, as you have receiv'd the Title after a different manner. They have every one a particular Flock, but you are superintendent over them all; you are not only Supream Pastor over all the Flocks, but likewise over all the Shepherds. He establishes this Privilege upon the Words of our Saviour in the Gospel, and he adds some Lines afterwards.— "Others are but call'd to a part of the Care, when the full Power is confided to you. Their Power is limited, when yours extends even over those who have a power over others; for it is your Business to excommunicate a Bishop, and suspend him if you see occasion. This is what you are at present by your Office to remember also what you were, and who you are Personally, for you are still what you were once, and the Dignity which has been superadded to you, has not been able to divert you of your Nature. You were born a Man; you have been made a Sovereign Bishop, yet you are still a Man, so that you ought to consider your self as a Man; draw the Veil which covers you, disperse the Clouds that environ you, and you will find your self to be no better than a Poor, Naked, Wretched Creature, that is dissatisfy'd with his Nature; that is ashamed of being Naked; that grieves for being Born; that murmurs at being destin'd to Labour, and not to Ease; and in a word, that is born in Sin, with a short Life abounding in Miseries, and full of Fears and Complaints. From these two Considerations he passes to a Third, which is to consider his Manners and Conduct, wherein he Counsels Eugenius to make a serious Reflection upon those things. He admonishes him in the Con-

Conclusion of this Book to be constant in Adversity, and humble in Prosperity; to fly sloth and unprofitable Discourse, and to practise no manner of Partiality in his Judgments.

In the Third Book he Treats of the Consideration that the Pope ought to have towards those that are under him, and they are the Faithful over all the World. He admonishes him again not to affect an arbitrary Power over them which he repeats (says he) because there is no Poison nor Arms that he ought to dread more than the Spirit of Tyranny. He afterwards proceeds to treat of the Duty of a Pope towards his Inferiours, and first in respect to those who are out of the Church, as well Jews and Infidels, as Christians and Schismatics. He says it is a Pope's Duty to bring over those that are in an Error, to keep those from straying that are already brought over; and lastly, to reconcile and fix Wanderers. For this purpose he must pitch upon unbiassed Preachers, and who shall be apt to be mov'd neither by Ambition nor Avarice: Such as these now adays swarm in the Court of Rome, and that is the reason that there is so little good done, and that Religion seems as it were at a stand. He speaks afterwards against the grievance of appealing to the Court of Rome: 'We must (says he) make a severe Reflection upon these Appeals, for fear a Remedy prove fruitless when it is established, for it seems to me, that a great deal of Mischief may be occasioned by these means, if moderation be not made use of. Every Body appeals to your Holyness; 'tis a badge of your Primacy, yet if you are wise, you will rather endeavour to procure the welfare of the Church, than insist upon the grandure of your See. Men appeal to the Pope, and would to God it was to a good end. Would to God that those who oppress others, would feel the effect of protection granted to such as are oppressed. But on the contrary, nothing is more common, than for the Oppressors to have cause to rejoice, and for the Oppressed to have reason to mourn. The Court of Rome seldom considers, either the Fatigue or Expence of a Journey in a just cause, and rarely are incens'd against him or them that were the cause of it. Rouze thee then, O Man of God, when these things happen: Be touch'd with Compassion for the Sufferer, and mov'd with Indignation against the Oppressor: Let the first be comforted by a Redress of his Grievance, by a full satisfaction for the Injury done him, and let the last repent of what he has done, and let him have no power to do the like again. The same punishment is to be inflicted upon those that appeal without cause, for no small Injury accreus that way; Men may be permitted to appeal where they are injured, but to appeal with design to injure others, is an injustice that ought not to be suffer'd. One may reasonably appeal from a Sentence, but it would be ill done to do so before any be pronounc'd, inasmuch that as then no manifest wrong appeared. Whoever appeals without being injured, has either design to molest his Adversary, or to gain more time for his Defence. He adds, that every Body complains and murmurs against the great Number and confusion of Appeals made to Rome, and that they are the occasion of innumerable Mischiefs. He confirms this by some Examples; and moreover Counsels the Pope not to suffer any longer such as promote injustice. He also in this Book condemns the Abuse of Exemptions. 'I have a mind (says he) to speak of the Complaints and Murmurings of the Churches who cry continually that they are torn to pieces and dismember'd, and that there are few or none, but either feel this Damage or fear it. If you ask wherefore? It is because the Abbys are wrested from the Jurisdiction of their Bishops, the Bishops from that of the Arch-Bishops, and the Arch-Bishops from that of the Patriarchs or Primates. Does this consist with Order? Can this be any ways excus'd? You may thereby indeed shew the absoluteness of your Power, but it is to be fear'd you can at the same time produce but little Justice. You do thus because you have a power to do it, but the Question will be only whether you ought to have done it. You are set above others, only to preserve to every one his Rank and Quality, and not to injure any one. He proves afterwards that these Exemptions are neither Just nor Profitable; that they confound the Oeconomy of the Church; that they occasion a great deal of Trouble, and raise a contempt as well of the lawful Powers establish'd by God Almighty, as of those of the Pope; and in a word, that they destroy the Ecclesiastick Hierarchy establish'd in imitation of that of the Angels. But what (may it be objected in the Pope's Name) will you then forbid me to grant Dispensations? No certainly, but to ruin the Church you ought not. I know you are establish'd universal Dispenser, but still it is to Edifice and not to Destroy. When there is a necessity for Dispensation it is excusable; when it is profitable it is likewise commendable, but when there is neither of these, it is rather Dissipation than a faithful Dispensation. There are several Monasteries in most Bishopricks, which belong peculiarly to the Holy See, according to the Will of their Founders, but then must those be distinguish'd which have been gain'd on account of Devotion, from those that have been covered by Ambition. And lastly, St. Bernard says, that the Pope ought in general to watch over the Church, and see strict Discipline and Ecclesiastical Institutions duly observed. He recommends to him more particularly to take care of the Reform, enjoyn'd by the Council of Rheim, relating to the Habits and Manners of the Clergy, as likewise to the Age and Qualifications of such as were to be admitted to Benefices.

In the Fourth Book, St. Bernard considers the Pope's Duty towards the Clergy, the Inhabitants of Rome, the Cardinals, and other Officers of his Court. He tells him his Clergy ought to be extremely regular in all their Actions, because it is they that are to set Examples to others. In relation to the People, he observes that it is enough to say, it is the People of Rome to denote what disorders they live in. That it is a People that have never been accustomed to Peace, that love Disturbances and Tumults, that are Cruel and Untractable, and who never submit; but when they have no power to resist: That he is nevertheless obliged to exhort them, though they seem irreclaimable. He farther admonishes the Pope in particular to endeavour a Reformation of Luxury and Sumptuousness. He gives him a great deal of Advice, concerning the Qualifications that are to be requir'd in Cardinals and other Ministers, which he shall pitch upon to be near his Person, and counsels him to take care that they be neither Selfish nor Arrogant; and in a word, he admonishes him to discharge his Domestick Affairs with true Oeconomy. Lastly, he makes a Recapitulation of all the principal Qualities that a Pope ought ought to have. Consider above all things (says he to him) that the Church of Rome over which God hath plac'd you as Supreme, is the Mother, and not the Commandress of other Churches; and moreover, that you are not a Sovereign Lord over the other Bishops, but only one among them; that you are a Brother of those that love God, and a Companion of such as fear him; that you ought to be a living Example of Justice, a mirror of Holiness, a model of Devotion, the support of Truth and defence of Faith, the leader of Nations and guide of Christians, the Friend of the Bridegroom, and conductor of the Bride to her Spouse; the Ordainer of the Clergy, the Pastor of the People, the instructor of the Ignorant, the Sanctuary of the Oppress'd, the Advocate of the Poor, the Hope of the Miserable, the support of the Fatherless, the Judge of Widows, the Eye of the Blind, the Tongue of the Dumb, the staff of Age, the revenger of Crimes, the Terror of the Wicked, and Glory of the Good, the Rod of the Powerful, the Scurge of Tyrants, the Father of Princes, the mitigator of Laws, the dispenser with Canons, the Salt of the Earth, the Light of the World, the pontiff of the most High, the Vicar of Christ, the Anointed of the Lord; and lastly, the God of Pharaoh.

In the last Book, he admonishes Pope Eugenius to consider the Power that is above him, that is, that of God and the Angels, which gives him occasion to treat of the Angels and of the Divinity.

St. Bernard began this Work in the Year 1149, and the first Book of it was finished the same Year. The second was sent to Pope Eugenius, in the Year 1150. after the ill success of the Croisade. The third in 1152, and the two last, some small time after.

These Books Of Consideration were follow'd by a Treatise of the same Nature, address'd to Henry Arch-Bishop of Sens, concerning the Manners and Duty of Bishops. St. Bernard therein shews how difficult it is to behave ones self in that Office, and the Necessity there is for having good Counsel. He afterwards lays down the Obligations for Bishops to prove an Honour to their Ministry by their Virtues, and not by Vanity and Luxury. He treats more particularly of the Virtues requir'd in a Bishop, such as Chastity, Humility and Pastoral Care; and lastly, he blames the Conduct of those Abbots who had a mind to exempt themselves from the Episcopal Jurisdiction, and wear Pontifical Habits. This Treatise was compos'd about the Year 1127.

About the same time St. Bernard being at Paris, writ a Discourse to the Clergy of that City, Intituled, Of Conversion, which follows the Treatise of the Duty of Bishops. It contains a Moral Exhortation to Repentance and change of Life, and towards the End, he speaks against Ambitious and inconsistent Clerks.

The Treatise of Commands and Dispensations was compos'd by St. Bernard, about the Year 1131. to serve for Answer to the Monks of St. Peter of Chartres, who had consulted him upon this Subject, and which is address'd to Roger Abbot of St. Colombe, near Sens, and not to these Monks of Chartres, because they had written to him with the leave of their Abbot. The first question he treats of, is whether all those things which are contained in the Order are Obligatory to them who profess them, or whether they are only Monitory and Instructive. And again, if one part ought to be taken for Precepts, and the other for Counsel. He answers, that the Order of St. Benner is propos'd to all Mankind, but not offer'd to be forc'd upon any Body. That any Person is free to be admitted of it, but when one is once engag'd in it, it becomes necessary so to continue; so that excepting a few particulars which relate to Spiritual Matters, such as Charity, Humility, &c. which are instituted only by God, and therefore not to be chang'd, all the other Rules of the Order are only Instructions and good Counsel to them who are not yet profess'd, but to such as are, they become Commands, and it is Criminal to violate them; that they are voluntary to the first, and compulsory to the last; yet however they may be dispens'd with upon an extraordinary occasion: That this power of dispensing belongs only to Superiours, and who cannot do it upon just Grounds, and not meerly out of Fancy. To explain the utmost extent of these Dispensations. St. Bernard reckons up three sorts of necessary things which are one establish'd, two Inviolable, and three Immutable. The establish'd are those which are found to be so very necessary, that every Body is not allow'd to alter them but Superiours only: These are Monastick Rules, which having been instituted by Saints, are as it were establish'd, and cannot be chang'd by private Persons, but as those who establish'd them were Men, those Men also who by a Canonical Election have succeeded to these Saints, have authority to give Dispensations without Abuse and Disorder, according to the circumstances of Time, Place and Persons; and moreover, these having been instituted for the encrease and preservation of Charity, as long as they are conducting thereunto they cannot be alter'd, even by Superiours; but if it at any time happens that they become contrary to the interest of Charity, in the Observation and Judgment of those that are oblig'd to inspect them, then it is but reasonable that what was at first instituted for the benefit of Charity, should be either omitted, interrupted or alter'd for the sake of Charity, and it would be unjust, that what had been establish'd on account of Charity, should subsist and flourish in prejudice thereof. These things we term establish'd, are fixt and immoveable, even in regard to Superiours, but then it must be as long as they are Serviceable and Assisting to Charity. The second sort of necessary things are call'd Inviolable, for that not having been instituted by Men, but establish'd by the Commandments of God, they cannot be chang'd but by the Authority of God himself who was the Author of them. As to the third kind of necessary things which he terms immutable, are those which are of such a Nature, that even God himself could not change them on whatsoever account. Under this kind are comprehended all the Instructions which Christ gave his Disciples on the Mount, and moreover, such as both the Old and New Testament have ordain'd relating to Charity, Humility, &c. all these things being such in their Nature, it would not be either allowable or profitable to retrench them, their Excellency being immutable and founded on the principles of the Law of Nature. Of these three necessary things, the first is covenant'd by free Will and a Promise. The second proceeds from the Authority of him that Commanded. And the third is grounded on the dignity of Precept.

From these Principles St. Bernard concludes that an Abbot cannot dispense with any thing that belongs to Spirituals in his Order, and as to Outward Observances he must not be guided by his Pleasure, and Fancy, but by Charity, because he is not above the Order which he Professes himself a Member of: That the Letter of the Rules must give way to Charity when Necessity so requires it: That even Superiours cannot restrain the Obligation of a Vow, unless upon an absolute Necessity; nor Extend it, unless the Inferiours Consent: that Nevertheless an Inferiour whose Obedience does not exceed his Vow is Imperfect, because perfect Obedience is not comprehended within any bounds, but embraces willingly and accepts courageously whatever it is commanded: That there is no Disobedience but what is to be avoided, but that several kinds of it are not equally Criminal: That there ought to be a difference put between the Person that commands and the things commanded: That in regard of the Persons we ought to be most Affraid of Offending our Superiours who have the greatest Authority over us; for it is better to obey God than Man, our superiours than our equals, and amongst our superiours those of our own Country rather than strangers: That in relation to Commands we ought to take more care of those which are of Importance than of those of less consequence, and that a Person is more or less culpable according as the Command is of more or less Importance: That this difference is in the Commandments Establish'd by Men, because they command with more or less Affection according as they see Occasion: That Perfect Obedience consists in not slighting the least commands and Obeying the Greatest, conforming ones self to the Intent of the Superiour: That slight matters, such as forbidding laughing or speaking when they are once commanded become Obligatory, and they who disobey them commit a sin, tho' no Crime, providing they do it not with contempt; but when they contemn the Law they are more than ordinarily Faulty: That God is to be Obey'd, as likewise is Man that commands in his name providing the command be not contrary to the Law of God: That in doubtful Matters the commands of superiours are to be follow'd: That all Sins of Disobedience are not equal; and that in respect of those which are committed against the Monastick Rules, some are more considerable than others: That it ought not to be thought that the Observing of Monastick Rules is Impossible, because that cannot be but either thro' Neglect or Inadvertency.

St. Bernard proceeds afterwards to Answer some Particulars which these Monks had propos'd to him.

The First was why an Erroneous Conscience does not sometimes change the Bad to Good in like manner as the Good to Bad? He Answers that to the End that an Action may be good, it ought to be Effectuated by the Knowledge and Love of God: That he that does a good Action believing it to be bad, has not the Love of Good in him, and by consequence his Action must be bad, but that he that does a bad Action believing it to be Good, is ignorant of what is Good, and therefore his Action cannot be esteem'd Good tho' his Intention was so: That his good will shall not be altogether depriv'd of a Reward, altho' thro' a deceiv'd simplicity he be not altogether exempted from Ill. But what (Perhaps you may say) did not he Act according to his Conscience? Yes, (replies St. Bernard) but according to a false and erroneous Conscience which does not exempt him absolutely from sin.

Next he Answers this Second Question, which was If in relation to Commands Disobedience be proportionably as Criminal as Obedience is Meritorious? He shews that in certain cases Obedience is more Meritorious than Disobedience Criminal.

They had likewise demanded of him how far they were Oblig'd to be resident, and where they might take a Liberty to quit their Monastery. He Answers that a good Monk ought never to forsake his Monastery without leave first Obtain'd from his Abbot when he is able to Undergo the Injunctions of his Order; but if the ill Lives of those which he lives amongst, hinder him from so doing, then is he to chuse and go to another Monastery where he may accomplish those Vows, he could not so well perform there: That altho' it be not allowable for a Monk who is in a well regulated Monastery tho' less Austere, to leave it without permission of his Superiour for one more Austere; yet if it happen that one having left it enters into another, none ought to Advise him to return, unless the Monasteries be near to each other, and he be speedily recall'd.

The Fourth Question they propos'd to him was Why St. Gregory the Great receiv'd a Person that had quitted his Order, into the Communion, and did not rather Oblige him to return to a Monastick Life. and why St. Austin Teaches that a Marriage contracted by such as had made a Vow of Continence is not to be Dissolv'd. St. Bernard owns freely that he is not of those holy Bishops Opinion: And that it belong'd to them to make good what they had Asserted.

He moreover Answers a Fifth Question Concerning the Bishops which St. Gregory had Cloyster'd up in Monasteries by reason of the Crimes they had committed, the Question was Whether they were to continue their Episcopal Habit there or to wear that of the Monks. He says He knows little of the matter but that it is likely they ought not to take upon them the Habits of the Order because they had never before done it, and because they were to continue in those Monasteries but for a time, and that they were confin'd to these Places only that they might have more leisure to Repent.

The Sixth Question which he Answers, is why of all the kinds of Repentance that among Monks has the Privilege of being term'd a Second Baptism? He says he believes it is by reason that they have absolutely renounc'd the World and Practise a spiritual Life after a very excellent and extraordinary Manner; That they are anew cloath'd with Jesus Christ, and retire from the darkness of sin into the Light of Piety and Virtue.

The Seventh Question they Ask'd St. Bernard, is If when an Abbot dies or is Depos'd, they have during the Interval a Liberty to go out of their Monasteries to go to another? St. Bernard Answers they have not, because the Vow they made is not to be limited by the death of the Abbot, but only Authoriz'd by his Presence, and that therefore a Monk ought to consider his Vow by the limits of his own Life, and not by that of another.

They also demanded of him what a Monk ought to do that has a secret Aversion to his Abbot, whose Election he looks upon to be Inconsistent with the Rules of the Order? to which St. Bernard Answers that when the Election is not manifestly Irregular the Monks ought to Obey.

The other Questions of these Monks being of less Consequence St. Bernard Answers them in few words, and there is but one which deserves to be Mention'd, which is, If a Person who has offended another be so disposed as not to design to do him any harm, and yet is not concern'd if any happen to him, be in a condition to Approach the Altar. St. Bernard Answers that he ought not to do it till his passion and Repentments be over.

St. Bernard's Apology Address'd to William Abbot of St. Thierry, is a Work in which he undertakes to justify himself and those of his Order against their being Accus'd of speaking ill of the Order of Cluny, that is to say of all the Benedictin Monks who had not embrac'd the Reform of Cistercium. Altho' this work be entitled an Apology, he nevertheless severely reproves in it the Monks of Cluny; but to have the better colour for doing so with greater freedom, he begins by declaring that neither he nor any of his Monks have ever spoken ill of that Order. He Approves of the different kinds of Religious Orders, and particularly commends that of Cluny. He exclaims against those that Judge rashly of the manner of living of this Order, who think themselves more holy, because they lead an austerer Life. He shows that Spiritual Exercises are more profitable than Corporal, and that a Man may be a good Monk without practising all these Austerities, and that also all these Austerities are Unprofitable when they are not accompany'd with Charity and Virtue. But for fear that he may not seem to Approve of the Irregularities which were practis'd in the Abby of Cluny, he falls upon and condemns them in the Second part of this Work. He says that the manner of Living among the Order of the Abby of Cluny seems to be a work of Saints, because being willing to save a great many Persons they have temper'd the Rigour of the Rules of this Order in favour of the Weak without altogether ruining it at the same time. But I cannot believe they have nevertheless allow'd of the Many Disorders that are to be found in most Monasteries. For I can never enough Admire (says he) how so great a Licentiousness in Meals, Habits, Beds, Equipages, and Horses can get in and be Establish'd as it were, among Monks; Inasmuch that those who have thus wholly Abandon'd themselves to these Excesses, seem to have had a mighty regard to the Spirit and Religion of their Ancestors: In a manner that by these extravagant Proceedings they have procur'd Vices the name of Virtues, and on the contrary Virtues the Name of Vices. When a Moderate Expence ought to be call'd Covetousness; Sobriety, if not Extraordinary, Austerity; and silence, sedeness; they on the contrary call a loose behaviour the Effect of Discretion; Profuseness, Liberality, and much talking but common Civility. Immoderate Laughing with them is no more a Vice, but goes under the Name of a Necessary gaiety. Luxury in Habits and Pride in Horses are look'd upon as the good Breeding of a Monk; and superfluous Ornaments are the furniture of his Chamber. Yet whatever they thus lavish away can it be call'd Charity? No; Unhappy Charity that destroys the True! Irregular Discretion that confounds in us that of Virtue! Cruel Pity that has greater regard to the Body than the Soul! What a strange Charity is this, to provide so well for the Flesh, and to take no care of the Spirit! What Discretion to give all to the Body and Refuse all to the Soul! He afterwards proceeds to compare the Sobriety of the Ancient Monks with the Intemperance of those of his Time, and gives a very lively Description of the Excesses of those last, whereof some of his Expressions follow. Are not their Mouths and Ears equally fill'd with Victuals and confus'd Voices? And while they thus Spin out their Immoderate Feasts, is there any one who offers to regulate the Debauch? No certainly: Dish dances after Dish, and for Abstinence which they Profess, two Rows of fat fish appear swimming in sauce upon the Table: Are you Cloy'd with these? The Cook has Art sufficient to Prick you up Others of no less Charms? He'll provide Sauces as different as your Dishes. Thus Plate is devour'd after Plate, and such natural Transitions are made from one to the other, that they fill their Bellies; but seldom blunt their Appetites, for the Palate is always so agreeably entertain'd with so many Novelties that it has no leisure allow'd it to be satisfy'd. Now Hunger is reviv'd again, the Appetite is Awaken'd and they fill on with the same greediness and Gust. The Belly having no Eyes sees not how much it takes in, and it is at last rather fill'd than Glutted. And because the simplicity of Nature is not entertaining enough, we make Mixtures and Hotchpotches of different kinds, and by exquisite and clected Sapours support and encourage our Intemperance, yet notwithstanding tho' we recede so much from Nature, yet are we not able to fill the vast Bounds of our Desires. He then reproves very severely, their Excess and Niceness in Drinking, and ridicules a pleasant custom of some Monks who being Young, Healthy and Strong, would retreat at Sacrament time into the Infirmary to Eat and Drink. From their Excess, in Eating and Drinking he proceeds to Dressing. We don't think our selves well Drest (says he) unless we have the best of every thing on our Backs. We don't search after the most decent and commodious but the Gayest Cloaths. We don't enquire for the warmest but the finest cloth. In a word, we don't desire (pursuant to our Vows) what may be most serviceable to us, but what may cover us most with Vanity? Don't we see every day that these Habits which were given to the Monks as Marks of Humility, are so contriv'd that they serve rather to exalt their Pride? scarce can a whole kingdom furnish them suitable to their Extravagant Desires. The Soldier and the Monk almost participate of the same Habit in the Field and the Cell. Will not a Monks Habit now a days become a Man of the World? A Prince likewise, providing he were in fashion, would not look Amiss in their Garments. But You'll tell me perhaps with the Proverb, That the Habit does not make the Monk, and that it is Virtue alone which governs the Heart tho' the Person be never so splendidly cloth'd. Very well: Then I would Ask you when you Traverse the Town, visit all Fairs, and the Merchants Houses, overturn the Magazines, Unfold the Silks, Feel them with the Fingers, View them with your Eyes, Hold them up to the Light, Reject some and like others, Whether you have not more Vanity than Virtue? He Adds moreover that the Abbots do not only Neglect to Reform these Disorders, but even Authorize and Encourage them by their Silence and Example. "I am Accus'd (says he) of being Arrogant; No matter I cannot hold my Tongue; I must always take the Liberty to enquire how the Salt of the Earth comes to be so deprav'd:

“deprav’d: What occasions Men, who in their Lives ought to be Examples of Humility, by their Practice to give Instructions and Examples of Vanity? And to pass by many other Things, what a Proof of Humility is it to see a vast Retinue of Horses with their Equipage, and a Consuted train of Valets and footmen, so that the Retinue of a single Abbot outshines that of two Bishops. May I be thought a Liar if it be not true that I have seen one single Abbot attended by above 60 Horses. Who could take these Men for the Fathers of Monks and the Shepherds of Souls? Or who would not be apt to take them rather for Governours of Cities and Provinces? Why, tho’ the Master be Four Leagues off, must his Train of Equipage reach to his very Doors? One would take these mighty Preparations for the Subsistence of an Army, Or for Provisions to Travel thro’ a very large Desert. Cannot Wine and Water be pour’d Undeas’d out of the same Cup? Cannot a Candle Give Light but in a Gold or Silver Candlestick? Cannot you sleep upon any other Bed but one of Tissue? Will not one Servant suffice to guide the Horse, serve at Table and make the Bed? If you tell me it is to save charges in an Inn that you carry so many things, then will I ask you why every one does not carry his own Provisions. He also does not spare the Monks in their Buildings. “But all this (says he) is little or nothing. Let us proceed to matters of greater Consequence, and so much the greater as by how much they are more Common. I shall not take Notice of the Dimensions of our Churches, of their Stately Height, of their Excessive Length and Superfluous Breadth, of their Sumptuous Ornaments and Curious Pictures which, attracting the Eyes of the Congregation do not a little, I fancy, divert their Devotion, and which seem to me not much more allowable than the Ceremonies of Ancient Judaism. As for my part I would have all Devotion and Places of Worship tend to the Glory of God. I would feign Ask the Monks (for I am a Monk my self) a Question which a Pagan heretofore demanded of Pagans. Tell me ye Priests (says he) what has Gold to do in Holy Places? Now I would make use of his Sense tho’ not of his words. Tell me Poor Souls then say I (if you may be call’d Poor Souls) what has Gold to do in the Sanctuary? I do not speak of Bishops and their Churches, for they may take a greater Liberty, but I speak of the Churches of Monks. We know that Bishops are indebted both to Wise Men and Fools, and must be allow’d to stir up Devotion in the People by Images, and other such Sensible objects, which they could not raise by their Preaching. But we that are now no more of the World; that have forsaken all the Pleasures and Riches of Life, for Jesus Christ his Sake; who have cast at our feet all that Glitters in the Eyes of the World, and have fled from Concerts of Musick, Fragrant smells and Tasting our senses, shall we (I say) Interrupt our Devotion by these Bawbles which we have left for its sake? What can we expect if we should Acquiesce in all these Vanities? The Admiration of Sots or the Satisfaction of Fools. Is it not the Commerce we entertain’d with the World that causes us to offer Incense to it’s Idols? and to speak more plainly, Is not Avarice the Cause, the very worst of Idolatries? Is it not true that we have greater regard to the Peoples Riches, than their Salvation? If you ask me how comes this to pass? I will discover the wonderful Secret to you. There is a certain Art to multiply Riches by Exhausting them, and like a River to make them encrease while they flow, for here Profuseness is the Cause of their Abounding. Here the Eyes and minds of the spectators are so seduc’d by these costly Vanities, that instead of Offering their Hearts to God they Sacrifice their Purse to Man. Thus you may see how Riches swallow up Riches, and how the Money of the Monks proves a bait for that of Fools; for Men have I know not what Inclinations to throw Water into the Sea, and to heap Riches upon those that have ’em in Abundance. The Monks cover the Relicks with Rich Attire, and the Pilgrim for fear of being dazled approaches them with shut Eyes and an Open Purse. The best Adorn’d of these Images are ever the most Holy. Men crowd to pay them Devotion, but first they must be Consecrated with the Holy Water, and after are led to the Image where they for the most part Admire the Ornaments more than the Thing it self. Next the Church is hung round not with Crowns of Thorns, but Rows of Pearls. The Lights of the Lamps are heightened by the Lustre of Diamonds, and instead of Candlesticks you see great Branches of Bras mounted, whose weight and Work-man-ship are equally to be Admir’d. What do you think can be the cause of all these fine things? Are they more to put you in mind of your Sins than to move your Admiration? No Certainly. O Vanity of Vanities? But this is not so much a Vanity as Folly. The Church shines in its Walls and Suffers in its Poor. It covers its stone with costly Garments and leaves its Children the Misfortune of being Naked. Here the Eyes of the Rich are fed with the Bread of the Poor. The Curiosity of Men is Indulg’d when the Miseries of the Indigent are Neglected. Nevertheless if we are Insensible of the Wants of Men, we ought to have more respect to the Images of our Saints, than to Pave our Churches with them. What shame is it for us to Spit in the Mouth of an Angel, and Tread on the face of a Saint? But all this while if we have an Indifference for the Carving, why do we not spare the Beauty of the Painting? Why do we paint with our Hands, what we intend to deface with our Feet? Why do we take so much pains in embellishing what we intend to defile the next Moment? What signify so many fine strokes when they are immediately to be cover’d with Dust? In a word what occasion is there for all these Vanities among Poor Monks who have renounc’d the World, unless we have a mind to Answer this Pagan Poet with David; Lord, I have been all Enflam’d with Zeal for the Honour of thy House and the Tabernacle of thy Glory. Well then I Agree with you; I consent to these Excesses in the Church. the simplicity and Devotion of Prayers may possibly sanctify that that would be a Crime in a Prodigal; but in Cloisters, to what purpose are those Paintings Cawings, before people who weep for their Sins. Towards the End of this Treatise he makes an Apologue for what he had said before. I hope in God (says he) that no body will be Offended at what I have writ, for I do not question but that in Reproving Vice so severely, I have a little grated the Ears of some that Practise it. But it may be if God is so pleas’d to have it, that even those whom I may be thought to have anger’d, may not be so. But this cannot possibly happen unless they cease to be what they are, unless they cease to Calumniate every day according to Custom; to Judge ill of their Brethren by reason they do not visibly

"lead so austere a Life; and if on the contrary those that are less mindful of exterior Rigour, do not take care to retrench all their superfluities. Lastly he blames those who thro' their Inconstancy go from one Order to another. "I have known some (says he) who had a mind to change the Moderation of their Order, for the Austerity of ours; What had they a mind to do then? Why what but to deprive their Brethren of the Scandal of their Inconstancy, and bring it to use? and they have not been less troublesome to us by their wretched Conversation, than they were to them by their leaving them; and because they have despised through Pride the profession which they had embrac'd, and presum'd to assume a new one beyond their Abilities, God's Justice has suffered their Baseness to appear, for they have been obliged to quit our Order through the same Imprudence that they engag'd in it, and shamefully to resume that which through Inconstancy they had forsaken, for not having entered on it, but by the Impatience they had to continue in their own, and not through an hearty desire of living with us, they have sufficiently shewn what they were, and going thus from one to the other, they have left Scandal with both. I don't here mean every Body, for thanks be to God, we have found some, who as they have begun generously, have persever'd honestly; for it is much better to persevere in what we undertake, than to undertake what we are not able to persevere in. But above all, let us all take care with the Apostle, that our Actions be conceiv'd in the Spirit of Charity.

The Treatise in commendation of the New Militia Address'd to Hugh, Great Master of the Knight Templars, was written by St. Bernard, about the Year 1135. This Order had been establish'd in the Year 1118. by some pious Knights who had made a Vow to the Patriarch of Jerusalem, that they would live like regular Canons in Chastity, Obedience and Poverty. The first that made this Vow, was Hugh de Pagani, and Geoffrey de St. Aldemar. The King of Jerusalem gave them for their Habitation a place near the Temple, whence they afterwards took upon them the names of Knights-Templars. The Patriarch and Bishops gave them for Employment the guard of the High-Roads that led to Jerusalem, to defend the Pilgrims from Robbers. The first Great Prior of this Order was this Hugh de Pagani to whom this Treatise of St. Bernard is dedicated. In the beginning of this Institution they were but nine Knights, but afterwards their Number soon encreased. Their Institution was approved of by the Council of Troyes, in the Year 1128. who drew up the Rules they were to observe; some believe they were drawn by St. Bernard, but it is certain that it was John de St. Michael, nam'd by the Council and by St. Bernard, who drew them up according to the relation of the Great Prior and the other Knights, and as may appear in the Prologue of these Rules. The Treatise of St. Bernard which we spoke of, does not consist of Rules, but is an Elogium on this Order, and an Exhortation to the Knights of the Temple, to acquit themselves well of their Duty. The World hears (says he) with Astonishment, that there is a new Militia establish'd in the Country, which Christ honoured with his Corporal Presence, to the end, that as he had exterminated the Prince of Darkness from thence by the force of his Arm, he might likewise at present drive away his Guards by the prowess of his Courageous Soldiers, and consequently redeem his People anew. This kind of Militia is altogether new, and past Ages, have known nothing like it. They are engag'd in two Combates at once, one against the Flesh, and the other against the Enemies of Christ; in one they resist a Corporal Foe by force of Arms, and in the other declare War against Vice and the Devil. He adds, that the occasion and design of this Institution is not less to be admir'd; for whereas all Wars among Men, are either begun on account of Anger, Ambition or Vain Glory, or out of a desire of getting possession of something, and the end propos'd is always some Temporal Interest. These Knights of the Temple acted by a quite different Motive, and had quite another end in their Enterprizes. Their Business was to fight the Battles of the Lord, without fear of Sinning, if they kill'd their Enemies; or Perishing, if they were kill'd themselves; because whether they kill or were kill'd, it was altogether to further the cause of Jesus Christ. In a word, the Lives and Behaviour of these Knights ought to shame all those, who now-a-days practise the Art of War, for they did nothing but by command of their Prior, had nothing but what he gave them, us'd nothing superfluous in their Habits, liv'd regularly without Wives and Children, pretended to nothing of their own, nor even so much as wish'd for more than they had; they moreover never gave their Minds to any Sports, delighted in no Shows, nor sought after any Honour, but wisely and diligently waited for the Victory of the Lord. After this great Commendation, St. Bernard exhorts them to acquit themselves courageously in their several Posts, having always a strict regard not to prophane the Holy Places upon which he makes divers Mystical Reflections.

The first of the Works compos'd by St. Bernard, is his Treatise on the Degrees of Humility and Pride, which follow in order of the Edition the Treatise which we have just mentioned before. The Title sufficiently acquaints you with the Subject: It suffices to observe that it is very moving, consisting of abundance of Piety and good Matter.

The Treatise of the Love of God was written some time after the foregoing. St. Bernard therein treats of the Manner, Reasons, Source, Degrees and Obligation of loving God. He says, that the manner of loving God, is to love him without Reserve; the reason of loving him, is because he is God, and loves us, for the Recompence of loving him, is the Love it self which makes our Happiness; then that the Source and Origin of this Love is Charity, which God affords us through Mercy. Lastly, that four degrees of this Love may be discover'd; the first is that by which Men love themselves; the second, whereby they love God for their own sakes; the third, by which they love God, both for him and themselves; and the fourth, whereby they love God on his account only. This fourth Degree is the supream perfection to which it is impossible to arrive in this Life, which even the Martyrs never did, and which the Souls of the Blessed cannot attain to, till they are separated from their Bodies, to which they have always a natural Tendency. He moreover distinguishes Chast and Pure Love from that which is interess'd; the Love of Slaves from that of Children, and at length, in respect of the Obligation to the Love of God he shews that it is natural so to do, and that it has an universal influence upon Mankind.

The

The Treatise of Grace and Free-Will, Address'd to William Abbot of St. Thierry, was written by St. Bernard, about the Year 1128. upon occasion of a Conference in which a certain Person had objected to him, that he had allowed too much to Grace, because that speaking of the Graces which God had done him, he had said that God had prevented him in doing Good, for that he ow'd to his Divine Grace all the Progress which he had made therein, and that he hop'd that he would in time grant him a full Perfection. One of the standers by, hearing him talk thus, said to him, What have you done then of your self, and what Reward can you expect when you confess God has done all? This Question occasion'd St. Bernard to write upon this Subject to explain the agreement of Free-Will with Grace. He therein follows the principles of St. Austin, and first he says, that Free-Will is sav'd by Grace, together with which it cooperates in consenting voluntarily to its Motions; that this Consent is effected by Grace it self, but that it is not less Free, because it is without constraint and voluntary. Where-ever there is consent (says he) there is a Will, and where there is a Will, there is a Freedom or Liberty. Ubi voluntas, ibi Libertas: The Will is a reasonable Movement, which presides over the Senses, and the Appetite which reason accompanies, follows and instructs without imposing any Force on it, so as that it may either incline to Ill by pursuing inordinate Desires, or to Good, by following Grace. The Will only is capable of both Happiness and Misery, and 'tis by its Consent and Approbation, that Men are either Wicked or Good, Happy or Miserable. He afterwards divides Freedom into three sorts, 1. Freedom or Exemption from Sin. 2. Freedom or Exemption from Misery. 3. Freedom or Exemption from Necessity. He calls the last Freedom that of Nature, the second, that of Grace, and the first, the Freedom of Life or Glory; for first, says he, Man was made an excellent Creature, with a Will altogether Free; secondly, he has been re-establish'd in Innocence to be a new Creature in Jesus Christ; thirdly, he is translated into Glory, to become a perfect Creature in Spirit. The Freedom of Necessity is to be found in all rational Creatures in whatever Condition they be; in Angels as well as Men, in the Blessed as well as the Damn'd, in the Righteous as well as the Wicked. They that would do well and cannot, are free from this Freedom, but they are not nevertheless free from the freedom of Sin, which ought rather to be call'd Free Advice than Free-Will. This second Freedom is found only in such as have Grace, as the Freedom of Misery, which he calls Liberum Complacitum, is to be met with alone among the Blessed, because those only can enjoy the Good that pleases them, and be exempt from the Ill that displeases them, they being only endued with Grace that can do Good, Grace being absolutely requisite to do it; so the Will of Free-Will to be absolutely perfect, has need of two Gifts of God, viz. of Conversion to Good and Confirmation in it, the first is granted through Grace to the Just in this Life, and the second is the effect of Beatitude. The first Man over and above the Freedom of Nature, had likewise the Freedom of Counsel and the Freedom of Compliance, but nevertheless in an imperfect Degree; for these two Freedoms have both their Degrees, one being superiour, and the other inferiour. The first Man in the state of Innocence had this last, but lost it by his fall, insomuch that he afterwards retain'd only Free Will. He fell by his Crime, and the ill use he made of his Will, but then he could not raise him self again by the same Power, by reason that he might not have fell unless he had so pleas'd, but being once fallen, it was not allow'd him to rise: What then says one, is Man's Free-Will lost because he cannot avoid Sinning? No, answers he, but rather the Free Warning he had not to Sin. He says moreover, that 'tis by reason of this treble Liberty of the first Man, that he was created after the Image, and in the resemblance of his Maker; that the Blessed have this resemblance in the greatest perfection, because they enjoy this treble Freedom, after a more excellent manner than the first Man, and that those redeem'd by Jesus Christ, during their stay on Earth, through Grace receive a part of this Freedom, because that though they cannot be altogether free from Sin and Misery, yet with the assistance of Grace, they may be able to prevent being Overcome by Sin and Misery. Let no body think then, says he, that Free Will is so call'd because it keeps as it were, the Will in balance betwixt Good and Evil, in a manner that it can do one as easily as the other, for if this were so, neither God, the Angels nor Saints, who can do no Ill, could be exempted from doing it no more than the very Devils, who can do no Good. It is rather call'd Free-Will, because let the Will be inclin'd either to Good or Ill, it is still Free, it being in the power of no Person to be either Good or Bad, without the consent of his Will: Now Grace does not take away this Freedom, because it sets the Will at work, and changes the Evil to Good; but nevertheless, by its free Consent: So those who act through fear of Death or Punishment, do not fail to act with Freedom, because the Will cannot be constrain'd but by its self, and that cannot be forced by a violence purely passive on its own part. That in a word, excepting original Sin only, all others are an effect of the Will which inclines to Sin without being oblig'd by any exterior Force: That we cannot pretend to any thing meritorious without Grace, but also that Grace cannot make us to merit without our Will. Merit consists in the consent that Free-Will gives to Grace, but at the same time this Consent does not proceed from Free-Will, because that cannot have a good Thought of it self, and that God is the occasion of all Good in us, whether it be the product of Thought, Will or Action, for he does as it were, prevent us by inspiring us with good Thoughts, and changes our bad Will by making us consent to Good, which he alone causes us to perform. That he effects the first without us, the second with us, and the third by us, for the beginning of our Salvation proceeds from God; we our selves are not the occasions of it, neither are we present at its being done, but the Consent and Action, although they do not proceed from us, yet are they not without us, insomuch, that we ought to take care when we feel good motions in us, not to attribute them to our Will which is weak, but to the sole Grace of God. These are the Principles and Maxims which St. Bernard establishes in this Treatise, which agree with the Doctrine of St. Austin, concerning the Nature of Free-Will, and the necessity and efficacy of Grace, without which Man could not perform any thing towards his Salvation.

The Tenth Treatise of St. Bernard, is a Letter address'd to Hugh of St. Victor, against some Opinions which an Anonymous Author had laid down; which were,

1. That

St. Bernard's Letter to Hugh of St. Victor.

1. That the Baptism of Jesus Christ had been obligatory ever since our Saviour had said to Nicodemus, Whoever is not born anew by Water and the Holy Spirit, shall never enter into the Kingdom of Heaven.

2. That no Body can be sav'd without actually receiving the Sacrament of Baptism, or Martyrdom in its stead.

3. That the Patriarchs of the Old Testament had as clear a knowledge of the Incarnation of the Christians.

4. That there is no such thing as a Sin of Ignorance.

5. That St. Bernard was mistaken in that passage of his Homilies, where he says, that even the Angels were not acquainted with God's Design touching the Incarnation.

As to the first, he says that it would be a hard case, that what Jesus Christ spoke in particular, should be taken for a general Precept, to oblige all Mankind. He is of Opinion, that Original Sin was remitted to the Jews by Circumcision, during the time of the antient Law, and to the faithful amongst the Gentiles, either by their own Faith, or by that of their Parents, and that the Obligation of being Baptiz'd under penalty of Damnation, did not commence till after the Promulgation of the Gospel.

As to the second, he is of Opinion that the Adult may be sav'd without actually receiving Baptism, if so be they cannot be Baptiz'd, although they desire it, because that actual Baptism is here supply'd by Faith and Vows. This he proves from divers passages out of St. Ambrose and St. Austin, who (says he) are two Authorities which I cannot possibly dissent from, but with whom I am always resolv'd to be, either in the right or the wrong. He adds, that what supplies Baptism in case of Martyrdom is not the Pain, but the Faith of him that suffers. In relation to Infants who can have no Faith, he owns that they cannot be sav'd without Baptism, although they might be sav'd by the Faith of others, when they actually receive it.

As to the third, he says that if the faithful of the Old Law had as clear a knowledge of our Mysteries, as we our selves, God would have been either too liberal to them, or too reserv'd towards us: That the Gospel would not have been then above the Law; that St. Paul would have been in the wrong, to boast that he and the other Apostles received the first Fruits of the Spirit of God; that this would be to do a considerable Injury to St. John Baptist. And lastly, that the Prophets have not been all equally enlighten'd with our Mysteries, and that even among Christians, some have more knowledge in those matters than others.

As to the fourth, he affirms that there are Sins of Ignorance, and that the Author of this Proposition ought to agree with him, since he has before maintain'd that the Precept of Baptism given to Nicodemus in private, oblig'd those who could have no knowledge of it; that it was moreover evident by the Holy Scriptures, that there are Sins of Ignorance, for that the Prophet David expressly prays to God not to lay his Sins of Ignorance to his Charge; also Moses speaks of Sins committed through Ignorance, and St. Paul is said to have persecuted the Church without knowing what the Church was; and our Saviour Christ beg'd of his Father to forgive them that Crucify'd him, in that they were ignorant of the Sin they committed.

As to the fifth, he explains what he had said concerning the Angels, knowing nothing of the mystery of the Incarnation before Gabriel came to acquaint the Virgin of the Circumstances of time, and place of the Incarnation, the manner thereof, and the Person chosen to be the Mother of God.

The Life of St. Malachy, &c. We will forbear speaking of the Treatise against the Errors of Abaelard, till we come to the History of that Author, so that there remains no more of the Treatises of St. Bernard in this second Tome, than the Life of St. Malachy, and the Tract concerning Singing, neither of which require any Observation.

St. Bernard's Sermons.

The third Tome contains St. Bernard's Sermons throughout the whole Year, upon the several Feasts, and other matters of Moment. These are his other Works, being writ with as elaborate as Spirit, and abounding with lively and solid Thoughts, very proper to move the Heart. He preach'd most of them to his Monks, whom most commonly he exhorted publicly every day. Father Mabillon shews in his Preface, that although there might have been several Converts among these Monks who did not understand Latin, yet for the most part these Sermons were delivered in that Language, as their style sufficiently demonstrates. He owns also that St. Bernard might sometimes have preach'd in the Vulgar Tongue, for the benefit of those that did not understand Latin.

The last Tome of the first Volume of St. Bernard's Works, contains his Sermons upon the Canticles, amounting to the number of 86, and being upon the two first Chapters, and the first Verse of the third Chapter, they comprehend an infinite number of both Moral and Spiritual Thoughts which he draws out of the words of the Text, either by explaining the Text after a mystical manner, or giving it an allegorical Sence, or adapting it to other Subjects. It is a wonderful thing to consider how ready he is at this manner of writing, and how he could be capable of composing so vast a Work of such different matters upon two such short Chapters as those of the Canticles.

Gilbert Abbot of Houlond.

The second Volume of Works that go under St. Bernard's Name, is divided into two Tomes. The first contains a Continuation of the Commentary on the Canticles. This belongs to Gilbert of Houlond, a little Island between England and Scotland, where there was a Monastery of Monks and Nuns, whereof he was Abbot, depending on the Bishop of Lincoln. He was of the Order of Cisteaux, and dy'd in the Year 1172, in a Monastery of the Diocess of Troyes in Champagne. This Continuation is of the same Nature with the Work of St. Bernard, and is divided into forty eight Sermons, all which do not go beyond the 10th. Verse of the 5th. Chapter. This is follow'd by seven other Ascetical Treatises, and four Letters by the same Author.

This Tome contains several other Tracts, attributed to St. Bernard, although it is certain he was not the Author of them.

The first is a Letter or a Book address'd to the Fryars of Mont-dieu, which is a Charter-House in William the Diocess of Rheims near Mouzon. This Book has been quoted under the name of St. Bernard, by William Abbot of St. Thierry, Gerson and others; but nevertheless, several ancient Manuscripts assure us that it was written by William Abbot of St. Thierry, since Monk of Signy, as well as the Treatises of the Contemplation of God, and that of the Nature and Dignity of Love, both which go under St. Bernard's Name, and come next after. This William was native of Liege; he came to Rheims with his Brother Simon; they embraced a Monastick Life in the Monastery of St. Nicaise; afterwards Simon was made Abbot of St. Nicolas, in the Diocess of Laon, and William succeeded Geofrey, translated from the Abby of St. Thierry, to that of St. Medard of Soissons, in the Year 1120. He had a very particular Correspondence with St. Bernard, and retir'd to the Monastery of Signy of the Order of Cisteaux, in the Year 1135, where he dy'd about the Year 1150. His Works over and above the first Book, being the Life of St. Bernard, and the three Treatises just mentioned, comprehend a Treatise call'd the Mirrou of Faith; another intituled the Enigma of Faith; a Book of Meditation; A Treatise of the Nature of the Body and the Soul; Another against Abaelard; a Book of the Works of William de Conches; A Treatise upon the Sacrament of the Altar; and lastly, an Exposition of the Canticles. All these Works are to be met with in the fourth Tome of the Bibliothèque of Cisteaux. There is moreover mention made of a Collection of Proverbs and Sentences, being only a Manuscript, with some other Works which are lost. The Abridgment of the two first Chapters of the Canticles, which immediately follows the preceeding Works is only an extract of remarkable things in the one and fifty first Sermons of St. Bernard upon the Canticles.

The Declamations and Discourses on the words of St. Peter with our Saviour Christ, are the Work of Geofrey Abbot of Igny, extracted out of the several Works of St. Bernard whose Disciple he was.

The Treatise of the Ladder of the Cloyster, or the method of Praying, which was found among the Works both of St. Austin and St. Bernard, has been since restor'd to Guigue, Prior of the Grand Charter-House, upon the Credit of a Manuscript of the Charter-House of Colen, having in the beginning of it a Letter of this Guigue, address'd to Gervase, and which serves for a Preface to the Book.

The pious Meditations concerning the knowledge of Human Nature, found amongst the Works of Hugh of St. Victor, belong neither to him nor St. Bernard, but rather to some more Modern Author.

The Treatise of the Edification the Inner House or of Conscience, found also among the Works of Hugh of St. Victor, belongs to some Monk, in all probability of the Order of Cisteaux, who liv'd much about the same time with St. Bernard. The same Judgment may be given concerning another Treatise of Conscience, and of another Treatise of the model of Life and Manners, which follows this.

The Treatise of Charity is compos'd of Matters drawn out of the Works of Richard of St. Victor, Peter of Blois, and of St. Bernard.

The Treatise Entituled the Mystical Vine, upon the words of our Saviour Christ, I am the true Vine, though it does not belong to St. Bernard, yet was written by some Author not long after him.

The Meditation on the Passion and Resurrection of Jesus Christ, which bears the name of St. Bernard in some Manuscript, yet is not at all like his Style, no more than the Lamentation on the Passion of our Saviour, and the Treatise on the three principal Mysteries of our Religion.

The Treatise of Virtues is not likewise of St. Bernard's Style, but rather belongs to some Benedictin Monk, who writ it for Probationers, on the three Virtues of Humility, Obedience and Charity.

The Exposition on the Lord's Prayer belongs to the same Author.

These Treatises are follow'd by some Sermons of St. Aelred, of Nicholas Disciple and Secretary to St. Bernard, who came from the Monastery of Montier-Ramey to Clairvaux, and who left this in disguise to St. Bernard; of Oger, Abbot of Lucedio, in the Diocess of Vercelli, who liv'd a little while after St. Bernard; and of some other Sermons whose Authors are unknown; but which are attributed to St. Bernard, together with some other Opuscula of Piety of the same Nature, without Authors Names; among which there is a Treatise on these Words, Why are you come? Which is printed in the Bibliotheca Patrum, under the Name of David of Ausbourg, of the Order of Minorites, with another Treatise on the manner of living well, dedicated by an Anonymous Author to his Sister.

This Tome ends with some pieces of Prose, likewise falsely attributed to St. Bernard.

The Sixth Tome contains the Sermons of Gueric, Abbot of Igny, whom St. Bernard brought to Clairvaux, in the Year 1131, from Tournay, where he was a Canon, and whom he had made Abbot of Igny, about the Year 1138, after that Humbert had laid down. Some Spiritual Letters of Guigue, fifth Prior of the Grand Charter-House, Author of the ancient Statutes of this Order. And the Historians of the Life of St. Bernard, whereof the first Book was compos'd, as we have said before, by William Abbot of St. Thierry. The second by Arnaud, Abbot of Bonneval, and the three last by Geofrey, Secretary and Disciple to St. Bernard, who had before been a follower of Abaelard, and who after having been Abbot of Igny, succeeded in the Year 1162, in the Abby of Clairvaux at Fastrede, and in the Year 1175, retir'd to Fossa Nova in Italy, of which he was Abbot, as also afterwards of Haute-Combe, St. Bernard about the end of this Century. He also writ a Commentary on the Canticles, the Life of St. Peter of Tarantaise, and divers other Treatises or Sermons which were never Printed. Cardinal Baronius has given us a Letter of this Geofrey, Address'd to Henry Cardinal-Bishop of Albani, against Gilbert of La Porre, which Father Mabilon has also placed at the end of this Volume, together with a Sermon of the

The Works of Gueric, Abbot of Igny. Lives of St. Bernard. Works of Geofrey, Disciple to St. Bernard.

the same Author for the Anniversary on the Death of St. Bernard, and a Letter of the same to Josbert on the Lord's Prayer.

The History of the Miracles of St. Bernard. The five Books of the Life of St. Bernard are follow'd by two Others containing an Account of his Miracles, one whereof consists of divers Pieces, that is of three Letters. One of Philip a Monk of Clairvaux to Sampson Arch-Bishop of Rheims. The Other writ by the Monks of this Monastery to the Clergy of Colen, and the third by Geoffrey Abbot of igny to the Bishop of Constance: The Second is drawn out of the Book entituled The Great Beginning of the Order of Cisterciux.

Other Lives of St. Bernard. Beside these Authors Father Mabillon gives us likewise the Life of St. Bernard compos'd by Alanus, who from being Abbot of Larivoir was made Bishop of Auxerre in the year 1153. and retir'd to Clairvaux in the year 1161 where he dy'd in the year 1181. Also some Fragments of a third Life of St. Bernard which was believ'd to belong to Geoffrey. And a fourth Life of St. Bernard written to about the year 1180 by John the Hermit, who had liv'd with St. Bernard's Disciples. He also Adds a Poem of the Monk Philosbeus of the Life and Praises of St. Bernard, with Verses likewise of other Authors in his Commendation. And Lastly the Bull of the Canonization of this Saint together with the Testimonies that divers Authors had given of him which concludes this Volume.

Nicholas a Monk of Clairvaux. He might also have put into this Volume the Letters of Nicholas of Clairvaux Secretary to St. Bernard Publish'd by Father Picart a Regular Canon of St. Victor, and Inserted in the 22 Tome of the last Bibliotheca Patrum. They are about 55. all full of wit and written in a very engaging Style; but they contain nothing remarkable either on account of Doctrine or Church-Discipline. This Nicholas after having left Clairvaux, retir'd into his Monastery of Montier-Ramey, where he dy'd about the year 1180. M. Baluze has also given us two of his Letters in the Second Tome of his Miscellaneous Works.

The Character and Judgment of St. Bernard. St. Bernard's Style is Lively, Noble and Concise; his Thoughts Sublime and his Diction Pleasant and Curious. He equally abounds with good Matter, Tenderness and Force. He is sweet and Violent: He engages the Mind by his Insinuating Manner, and touches the heart with his Movements. His Exhortations are Precing; His Admonitions full of Gravity; His Reprimands Efficacious; His Reproaches so temper'd with good nature that it is easie to perceive that he is in Charity with the Person that he Rattles and reproves rather to correct than to insult or domineer over him. He knows how to commend without Flattery, and to tell Truth without Offending. He diverts, recreates and pleases; He instills dread and Inspires Love; his knowledge is more useful and wholesome Doctrine than Curious Learning. He is so full of the Holy Scriptures that scarce a Period passes but he has some words or expressions out of them. St. Ambrose and St. Austin are those of the Fathers which he has follow'd most, and which he considers as two Patterns that he is Indispensably bound to Imitate. He also Understood very well the Canons and Rules of Discipline of the Church; but he more particularly apply'd himself to Divinity and Morality. His Moral Sentences are noble, lively, weighty, and contain a great deal of sense in few words. He is Ingenious and very fertile in Allegories. He treats of Doctrines after the manner of the Ancients, and not According to the Methods of the Scholasticks, and Controversies of his Time, which has gain'd him the Title of the Last of the Fathers. Altho' he has taken most of his Thoughts from the Ancients, yet has he manag'd them with so great Address that they seem to be his own. He was, in so great Reputation for Piety and Learning while he liv'd, that all Potentates desir'd to have their Differences determin'd by him, and they look'd upon his Decisions as Indispensable Laws. The Proudest Kings and Princes have willingly condescended to obey him; The Bishops not only had recourse to his knowledge, but likewise regarded his Decisions as so many Oracles; and have Referr'd themselves to him about the most Important Affairs of the Church. The Popes themselves have taken his Advice and look'd upon it as the greatest support of the Holy See. And all People had a very profound Respect and particular Veneration for his Person and Character. In a word, it may be said of him that even in his solitude, he govern'd all the Churches of the Welt. But what is most remarkable is that he knew how to join the Love of silence and a Retreat with so many Occupations and Employs, as likewise a Profound Humility with so great an Elevation.

Editions of St. Bernard's Works. No Father of the Church has had his works so often printed as St. Bernard. The First Edition is that of his Sermons on the Times and Saints, Printed with his Book Dedicated to the Knights Templars, in the year 1475 at Mayence by Peter Schoiffer. About the same time the Treatise of Consideration, the Apology to William Abbot of St. Thierry, and The Treatise of Commands and Dispensations were printed at Rhoin. In the year 1481. his Letters with his Sermons were Printed at Brussels. This Edition was follow'd by that of Paris in the year 1494. which contains 310 Letters with his Sermons on the Canticles. The Editions of Bresse of the year 1495. of Spire in the year 1501. and of Venice in the year 1503 are also very Imperfect. That of Paris in the year 1508 contains almost all this Saints Works: They were Collected by the care of John Bouchard and Printed by John Petit. In the year 1515 Josse Clitout Printed them at Lyons with the Sermons of Gilbert de Hoiland on the Canticles. This Edition has been several times Reprinted at Paris and Lyons. In the year 1520 two Monks of Clairvaux Publish'd a New Edition of St. Bernard's Works more correct than the former, Printed the First time at Lyons. Some time after Francis Comestor of the College of Sorbonne revis'd the works of this Saint, and Printed a new Edition at Paris in the year 1547. Whilst this Edition was selling and Reprinting, Anthony Marcelin publish'd another at Basil in the year 1552. In which St. Bernard's works are rang'd after a New Order, and Divided into four Parts: The First containing his Sermons: The Second his Letters: The Third his Treatises: and the Fourth his suppos'd Works. In the year 1556 Francis Comestor's Edition was Re-printed as Printed with the Additions found in the Edition of Basil and some other Treatises. After this John Gillot undertook to present the Publick a New Edition of St. Bernard's Works, more Correct and more Ample than the former; This was Printed at Paris by Nivelle in the year 1572. and afterwards Re-printed several times, particularly in the year 1586. In the beginning of the following Century, Edmund Tiragueau a Monk of Cisteaux publish'd a new Edition of St. Bernard's Works, in the year 1601. And Eight years after John Picart gave another which was reprinted several times at divers Places. At length James Merlon Horstius labour'd seriously to get a good Edition of this Fathers works, and after a considerable time and a great deal of pains taken, he Produc'd one and Printed it in the year 1641. This Edition was receiv'd with Applause, and Reprinted in divers Places. Nevertheless Horstius having past over several Faults in the Text, which might be corrected by Assistance of the Manuscripts, Father Chantelon of the Congregation of St. Maur undertook to revise his Edition and Presented the Publick with his Sermons on the Times, and the Saints corrected, in several Places. This Father dying before he had finish'd his Design, Father Mabillon was pitched upon to continue what he had so well begun, who Publish'd this Saints Works entire in the year 1666. in a Great and small Volume according to the Model of Horstius, and review'd and corrected by divers Manuscripts. But as this Edition was the first work of this Learned Monk, he sometime after discovered several Errors which he had premitted before, and therefore Undertook a Second Impression at Paris in two Volumes in Folio in the year 1690. In which the Order is altogether New, and which is moreover enrich'd with fine Prefaces, and divers short Notes at the bottom of the Pages, and which reach to the end of the first Volume. It is this Edition we have follow'd in these Extracts which we have made.

CHAP. V.

The Life and Writings of Peter, Sirnam'd the Venerable Abbot of Cluny.

Peter Maurice Sirnam'd the Venerable, the Ninth Abbot of Cluny, descended from a Noble Family of Auvergne. His Father Maurice, and his mother Rangarda presented him to the Monastery of Cluny, where he took upon him the Habit of that Order at the hands of Hugh the first Abbot of Cluny of that name. Whilst Pontius was Abbot he was made Prior of Vezelay, and then of Domnus; and at last Elected Abbot of Cluny in the year 1123. on our Lady's Assumption day, when he was but Thirty years Old or thereabouts. He dy'd in the year 1157. on Christmas day.

Whilst he was Abbot he wrote a great many Letters, of which they have made a Collection divided into six Books. In the Last Book is inserted a Treatise against the Jews, and another Tract against the Petrobians. He likewise compos'd two Books containing the Narratives of several Miracles which happen'd in his time; four Sermons; a particular Letter against those who maintain'd that Jesus Christ was not in express Terms call'd GOD in the Gospel; several pieces of Prose, one an Encomium of our Saviour; another upon St. Benedikt, a Third upon the Resurrection of our Saviour, and a fourth in Honour of St. Hugh; two Hymns, the one upon the Virgin Mary, and the other upon Mary Magdalen; and a discourse in Prose upon the Virgin Mary. He procur'd the Alcoran to be turn'd out of Arabick into Latin, and made a Treatise to refute it in opposition to Mahometanism.

We have almost all these Works printed a-part at Paris in the year 1522. at Ingolstadt in 1546. in the Library of Cluny, and in the last Bibliotheca Patrum.

Among this Authors Letters there are several which contain several considerable Points both of the History and the Discipline of these times; so that we cannot forbear giving you an Abstract of them.

The First Letter of the first Book is directed to Pope Innocent II. He acquaints him that the Archbishop of Bourdeaux who was a zealous promoter of the Interests of his Holyness, had given him intelligence of the News he had receiv'd: That he was heartily glad at the happy success of his Affairs, and that he congratulated him for the great care he took in Reforming the Church. He declares to him that he is very much concern'd that he is not in a posture of being an Assistant in so great an undertaking. He exhorts him to persevere in the vigorous maintenance of his Dignity, in hopes that God, who had already subdu'd part of his Enemies, would at last bring the rest under his feet. He assures him that he shall always be inviolably at the Devotion of his Holiness, and that where or in what Circumstance soever he should be, he would always regard him as the Sovereign Pontiff. In the Close of this Letter he intreats the Pope to remember that the Church increas'd at first by Sufferings and Persecutions, and that it surmounted all opposition by Patience: That he had combated against its Enemies Seven years already, that in the Eighth it was to be hop'd, he would sing Praises of Joy and Exultation. This Conclusion makes it appear that this Letter was wrote in the seventh year of the Pontificate of Innocent II. Anno Christi 1127.

In the Second of the same Book he wrote word to the Bishop of Albani, that the Bishop of Troyes was ready to bestow one of the Prebends of his Church on the Monks of Cluny, as formerly the Prebends of Chartres, and Orleans had been bestow'd on them. He intreats him to promote this Business at Rome, if he thought in Conscience he could safely do it. He likewise intreats him to prevail upon the Pope to remit to him the Tryal of a Priest within his Jurisdiction, who was gone to Pisa, where the Court of Rome then was, in order to have his Cause heard there.

In the Third he wrote to Haimeric Chancellor of the Church of Rome, concerning the Affair of the Monks of Aniana, who had prefer'd great complaints against the Bishop of Bezius. He therein takes notice that in his time the Members of the Church were very much disjoynted in his Country, that the superiors insulted over the Inferiors, and the Bishops over the Monks; so that (says he) it seems as if their Aim Peter the and Design was not to feed their Flocks like Shepherds, but fleece and drain them like Hirelings. In the fourth he acquainted Hugh Arch-Bishop of Roan of the Death of one of his Clerks, whom he had assisted in the last Moment of his Life. He takes notice that they had given him the Extreme Unction before the Viaticum, and that afterwards he receiv'd the Sacrament twice.

In the Eleventh he intreats Pope Innocent to be favourable to the Church of Orleans by confirming the Election of Heli Abbot of St. Sulpicius to the Bishoprick of that Church.

By the Fifteenth he acquaints Adela of the death of Henry King of England, who departed this Life on the second of December 1135. after he had receiv'd all his Sacraments, as he observes in this Letter.

In the Seventeenth he acquainted Pope Innocent II. of the Murders committed on the Sub-dean of Orleans, and Thomas Arch-deacon of Paris, and prays him to confirm by his Apostolick Authority, the Sentence pass'd in France against the Murderers.

The Twentieth directed to Monk Cislebert contains a long Instruction about the Duties and Virtues of Monks.

In the Twenty Third he declares to Pope Innocent that he had much ado to resolve upon sending any of his Religious to re-establish the Abbey of Luxeu, because he fear'd it would prejudice his Monastery by drawing off the Monks from thence; and that besides it was easier to found new Monasteries than to re-establish Old Ones: That however in obedience to the Commands of his Holiness, he had offer'd to the Monks of the Abbey of Luxeu, who had waited upon him, to send them an Abbot and some Officers; but that they had rejected the Religious which he had offer'd them. He intreats the Pope, that if they were still resolv'd to have a Monk of Cluny for their Abbot, he would not grant them Liberty to choose whom they pleas'd, but order them to be satisfy'd with his Choice.

In the Twenty Seventh he complains to the same Pope, of the outrages offer'd to the Arch-Bishops, Bishops and Abbots, among whom he was present in the Town of Luni.

The Twenty Eighth is an Apology for the Order of Cluny against that of Cîteaux, directed to St. Bernard; wherein after he had pass'd several Compliments upon him for his Learning and Piety, he relates the Points, upon which the Monks of Cîteaux pretended, that those of Cluny deviated from the Rule of St. Benedic't; which are as follow. (1.) That they bestow'd the Monastick Habit on Novices as soon as they were presented, without staying till their probation Year was over, according as the Rule prescribes. (2.) That they made use of Habits made with Skins. (3.) That they wore Breeches always, though it was not permitted by the Rule, unless in case of Travelling. (4.) That they had thicker covering on their Beds than was prescribed by the Rule. (5.) That they had more than two Dishes serv'd up at Table with a second Course. (6.) That they always admitted the Religious Apostates, tho' the Rule prescribes that they should admit them only thrice. (7.) That they did not observe the Fasts which the Rule prescribed. (8.) That they did not inure themselves to any Manufacture. (9.) That when they entertain'd Strangers, they did not bow to them, and that the Abbot did not wash their Hands and Feet, as the Rule prescribes. (10.) That the Abbot kept not an Inventory of all the Tools and Urensilis of the Monastery. (11.) That when they are out of their Monastery, they do not bow the Knee, as usual in saying their Office. (12.) That the Table of the Abbot is not set apart for the Entertainment of Strangers. (13.) That when two Monks chance to meet, the Younger does not ask Blessing of the Elder. (14.) That they do not make one of the eldest Monks Porter of the Monastery Gate. (15.) That the Porter does not reply Deo Gratias, i. e. Praised be God, to those who knock at the Gate of the Monastery. (16.) That they renew the Vows that they have made in one Monastery, when they admit themselves into another. (17.) That they admit the Monks of another Monastery into theirs, without the leave of their Abbot. (18.) That they would be exempted from the Jurisdiction of their Bishop. (19.) That they hold Parishes and Tithes, which are only the Property of those who Preach and Administer the Sacraments. (20.) That they are possessors of Lands, and concern themselves with the Affairs and Business of this Life, as if they were mere Seculars having Territories, Seignories, Vassals, Banks, and Monks who are employ'd as Solicitors and Advocates.

He returns a Reply to all these Objections, in the Name of the Monks of Cluny, and at first says in General, that they who make those Objections, are an upstart sort of Pharisees, who were for distinguishing themselves from other Folks, and would be reckoned better than them. He asks them how it comes to pass that they who boast to be such strict observers of the Rule, forget at the same time the Observation of one Article, wherein the Monks are enjoyned, not only to call, but also sincerely to esteem themselves to be the refuse and vilest of all Mankind. "Is it (says he) the effects of this Article, which enjoins us to believe and assert our selves to be worse than others, to undervalue their Actions, and overprize our own, to condemn them, and set too high an esteem upon our selves? — You stile your selves the only true Monks now extant in the World, and treat all other Monks as Impostors and Corrupt; you wear an Habit of extraordinary Colour to distinguish your selves from others, and you brag to be the white Monks in the midst of black ones, though the black habit was made choice of by our Fathers out of Humility; and though we read that St. Martin, that admirable true Monk, wore a long black Habit, and not a short white one as yours is. Now don't you violate the Rule of which you pretend to be so great Observers, since it declares it self against Monks being concerned for the Colour or the Quality of the Stuff which they wear? Are not you Prevaricators in changing that Colour which is most conformable to Humility and Austerity for another more glaring and the emblem of Joy.

After he had made these Reflections on the Monks of Cîteaux, he maintains that those of Cluny do not transgress the Rule, in following the Traditions of their Fathers, since they derive them from the Saints, who authorize them by the Sanctity of their Lives, and by their Miracles, and who had a Privilege of prescribing Laws to them. Afterwards he returns a more particular and direct Answer to the fore-foremention'd Objections. (1.) That as to what related to the Admittance of Novices, they therein follow'd the Rule of Jesus Christ, who order'd the Rich Man in the Gospel who desir'd to be perfect, immediately to sell all he had, to give it to the Poor and to follow him; and who order'd the man that was willing to go bury his Father before he would follow him, to leave the Dead to bury the Dead; and to follow him without any more ado. And that they therein imitated the Example of the Apostles who follow'd Jesus Christ as soon as ever he call'd them, and who receiv'd into the Christian Church all those who offer'd themselves. He owns that the Letter of the Rule is against this Custom; but withall avers that the End and Intention of the Rule being Charity and the Salvation of our Neighbour, which are in force so long as any one practises the Rule even in the strict and Literal Sense, one may with reason deviate from the Letter of the Rule. He adds that since the Discipline of the Church has been alter'd with respect to a great many points, 'tis no such extraordinary matter that the Monastical Discipline should be subject to the same Alterations. (2.) That St. Benedict in his Rule had prescribed nothing directly concerning Habits: That he had no where prohibited the Wearing of Leather; that he only order'd that they should be different according to the Variety of Climats: That a Leathern Habit was most suitable to Austerity and Solitude. That the Prophets, Elias, St. John Baptist, and the Ancient Hermits were cloth'd with Leathern Garments: That we find in story that St. Benedict himself wore such an Habit: That lastly it mu't be left to the discretion of the Abbot to prescribe the Quality of Habits, according to the Climate, the Season, and the Constitution of those who wear them. (3.) That they wear Breeches for Decency and Modesty's Sake. (4.) That the Rule leaves the Abbot full power to prescribe what sort of Covering the Monks should have on their Beds. (5.) That with respect to Eating, we ought not Scrupulously to adhere to the express Terms of the Rule, since St. Benedict gives the Abbot liberty to Augment the portion of Bread and Wine, if they have work'd more than ordinary: And that 'tis well said of him, that 'tis Enough to allow the Monks two dishes of Meat upon the Account of their Infirmities, that so if they have no Stomach to the One they may eat of the other; but that if it should so happen that they could not eat of either of these two dishes, he has no where prohibited the allowing them a third or fourth Dish: Lastly that we ought to proportion the Quality and the Quantity both of Meat and Drink to the Constitution and strength of men, and to refer all to Charity, which is that Sovereign Rule, by which we ought to be rul'd and govern'd. (6.) That in receiving the Religious as often as they were willing to return, they did nothing but what was agreeable to the Evangelical Law, and to the Practice of the Church: That what St. Benedict says on this subject in the Rule was only by way of Commination. (7.) That as to the Fasts they observ'd what was prescribed by the Rule, viz. from the 13th of September to the Beginning of Lent, they did not eat on any day (except Sundays) till None: but that from Whitsontide to the 13th of September they did always eat at Noon, tho' the Rule seems to prescribe that on Wednesdays and Fridays they should not eat till the Hour of None, because it leaves the Abbot at his Liberty to augment or diminish the Fast. (8.) That they had particular Reasons for not working with their hands, since such a Labour was injoin'd the Monks only to keep them from being Idle, and that they being engag'd in other more useful Employments, were dispens'd from that. (9.) That it was a sort of Childishness to condemn the Order of Cluny, because the Religious and the Abbot of that house did not prostrate themselves before all the strangers that came to them, nor wash their Feet; and besides that this Employment would wholly divert the Monks from all their other Duties by reason of the great Number of the strangers: That however to avoid the total neglect of what the Rule prescribed each Monk every year washes the Feet of three strangers, and presents them with Bread and Wine. (10.) That the Abbot was discharg'd from the Care of keeping an Inventory of the Tools and Utensils of the Monastery, provided another man did it, since it is impossible for him to do all things himself. (11.) That they do not omit those Genuestions which they are requir'd to make during the Office, tho' they say it abroad, unless when the badness of the Weather hinders them, and that then they say a Miserere. (12.) That the Abbot orders an allowance of meat and Drink to be given to all strangers, but that it was not proper to introduce all manner of persons without distinction into the Refectory; nor that he should leave the Religious to wait upon Others. (13.) That the Young Monks do ask blessing viva voce of the Elder, when they meet them out of the Bounds of their Monastery; but that within those Bounds they only ask it by a low Bow without saying any thing, that they might preserve their Silence. (14.) That if they do not place at their Gate an Elderly Monk, yet they set one there of known and approv'd fidelity and Wisdom; that the Monastery-Gates are almost always open in the day time, and that 'tis sufficient that they have one to open them when they are shut. (15.) That 'tis not at all necessary that the Porter should cry Deo-Gratias to all Comers. (16.) That there was no inconyeniency for the Monks when they change their Monastery to renew their Vows, and that the Rule it self in express terms permits the Renewing of the Vow of Constancy. (17.) That they are satisfied that a Monk cannot leave his Monastery without the leave of his Abbot, so long as that Abbot discharges the Duty of a Pastor; that is so long as he takes care to provide for the Bodily necessities of his Religious: But that if it should so happen that a Monk cannot Live or be safe under an Abbot in one Monastery, he may leave that Monastery without the Licence of his Abbot: That 'tis upon this account that the Abbot of Cluny has obtain'd a Privilege from the Holy See, of entertaining all the Religions who are forc'd to leave their Monastery for either of these reasons. (18.) That they have for their Bishop the Chief of all Bishops, and the Bishop of all the Churches, namely the Bishop of Rome, who has granted them the Privilege of being exempted from the Interdictions or Excommunications of all other Bishops besides himself: That notwithstanding this they receive the holy Christm, the holy Oyls, holy Orders, and the Consecration of their Churches from the hands of other Bishops: That to find fault with their Privileges is the same thing as to question the Authority of the Holy See; that several other Monks enjoy the same Privileges; and that Saint Gregory granted such to a great many Monasteries.

Peter the Venerable Abbot of Cluny. (19.) That the Pope has given them leave to have Parishes, and to enjoy Tenth's: That 'tis reasonable for them who offer up continual Prayers for the Faithful to live by the offerings of the Faithful; and that as Secular Clerks have a Right to enjoy the Revenues of Ecclesiastical Estates, because they administer the Sacrament, and preach the Gospel, so the Monks likewise may receive the Oblations of the Faithful, upon the account of the Psalms which they repeat in their behalf, upon the account of the Tears which they pour out to divert the Justice of God, and upon the account of the Alms, and other good Works which they practise. (20.) That the Religious are not forbid holding Temporal Estates of what kind soever; and that they may maintain their Estates by all manner of just and lawful ways. Lastly, he observes that we ought to make a distinction between two sorts of Precepts the one Immutable, which can never be chang'd, such as our Love to God and our Neighbour, whatever else is commanded by the Laws of God, and others which may be chang'd for a greater Good, or for the avoiding a greater Evil; and he avers, that whatever they had alter'd in the Rule of St. Benedict, was of the latter kind; and that they did not change it but only for the greater Benefit, and to fulfil Christian Charity, which ought to be the Supream Rule and Law.

 [And now upon this whole Debate or Controversie between the Monks of Cisteaux and those of Cluny, we cannot forbear making this one Remark, that according to our old counse English Proverb, here has been a great Cry, but little Wool; a great noise and clamour about the Externals, but scarce one Word said, Pro, or Con, about the Internals of Religion; which sufficiently shews, that when Men are once wedded to any party in Religion, their greatest Heats happen about the Circumstantial's of Religion, to which that Party adheres, and that they have little or no Concern for the Fundamentals of the truly Catholick and Christian Church.]

The Twenty Ninth Letter is likewise written to St. Bernard, upon a particular Quarrel about one of the Monks of Cluny elected to the Bishoprick of Langres, whereof St. Bernard makes mention in his 164th. Letter, and in those that ensue. Peter of Cluny in this Letter says, that Saint Bernard being prejudic'd against this Monk upon some false Reports, oppos'd his Ordination.

The Thirty Third is written to Pope Innocent, about another Difference between the Monks of Cluny, and those of Cisteaux. This Pope in the Year 1132, had exempted the Monks of Cisteaux from paying Tenth's. This was a considerable Prejudice to the Monks of Cluny, particularly to the Abbey of Gigny, who had considerable Tithes to receive from the Lands belonging to the Monastery of Miroir. The Monks of Gigny were for demanding them, for which the Pope had interdicted their Church; whereupon Peter the Venerable conjures him not to deprive the Monks of Gigny of a Right which belong'd to them, and to suspend the Interdiction which he had pronounc'd against them, that so they might have time to inform him of the justice of their Cause. About the same time he wrote upon the same Subject, the Thirty Fourth Letter to Haimeric, Chancellor of the Church of Rome, whereby he represents to him more at length the injustice which he pretends was done to his Order; and directed another Letter to the Chapter General of Cisteaux, whereby he exhorts them to quit this their Pretension. This is the Thirty Fifth Letter, which is written with a great deal of Smartness and Discretion. However, because several Abbots of the Order of Cisteaux were displeased at it; the next Year he sent them a Letter of Excuse, which is the Thirty Sixth and last of this Book. The Monks of Gigny not being able to obtain of the Pope what they desired, were for doing themselves Justice, and some few Years after went to the Monastery of Miroir, where they committed great Outrages. Pope Eugenius III. Innocent's Successor being inform'd thereof, wrote to Peter the Venerable about it, and threatened the Monks of Gigny to punish them severely, in case they did not make Reparation for the wrong which they had done to the Monks of Miroir. St. Bernard and Peter the Venerable, met at Cluny to adjust the Affair; the Damage was estimated at above Thirty thousand Sols; but the Monks of Gigny having made but very inconsiderable offers of Reparation, St. Bernard wrote to the Pope about it. At last the Affair terminated in an Accommodation made after the Death of St. Bernard, in the Year 1155.

The First Letter of the Second Book is wholly Doctrinal. He therein proves against a Man, who was fallen into the Error of the Apollinarists, that the Humanity of Jesus Christ was compos'd both of Soul and Body.

The Second is directed to Peter Arch-Bishop of Lions. He congratulates his being advanc'd to the Primacy of a Kingdom, which acknowledg'd no other Superiour than the Holy See, and which had an Authority over all the Churches of France. He exhorts him to use his utmost Diligence for the Restoration of Piety, particularly within his Diocess. In this Letter, he gives us a Description of the Irregularity of the Manners of the Ecclesiasticks and Religious.

In the Third he complains to Pope Innocent of the Coldness which he shew'd to the Cardinal Bishop of Albany, to whom he lay under great Engagements; and exhorts him to leave him in France with Authority, where he was capable of doing a great deal of Good, till such time as he could recall him with Honour to Rome.

In the Fourth he exhorts Gilo Bishop of Fresusi to abandon the Party of Peter de Leon, which could not be the true Church, since it was reduc'd to a small Number of People shut up in several Forts of Italy or Poitou. The Thirty Fourth is likewise directed to the same Bishop, upon the same Subject.

In the Seventh he shews Theotard Prior of la Charité, that he is bound both in Duty and Obedience not to quit his Charge.

In the Tenth, he with a great deal of Freedom remonstrates to Pope Innocent, that he does not do well in recalling the Cardinal of Albani to Rome.

In the Eleventh he complains to that Cardinal, that they had turn'd out several Monks out of the Monastery of Verdun to put some Clerks into their places.

The Sixteenth is a Circular Letter to all the Superiours of the Monasteries of his Order, whereby he recommends to their Prayers his Mother Raingarda, who departed this Life on the 22d. of June, and orders them to say thirty Masses for the Peace of her Soul, and to feed twelve poor People in the Monasteries where it could be done, and that in the others, the Priests should say two Masses, besides the General Mass.

In the next Letter, he tells us after what manner he receiv'd the News of his Mother's Death, who was become a Religious of Marigny. He therein makes her Encomium, and describes the Circumstances of her Death, which was wholly Christian. These and the following Letters inform us that she dyed at the time of his Return from the Council of Pisa, held in the Year 1134.

The Twenty Sixth is a Letter of Pope Innocent directed to Peter of Cluny, wherein he recommends himself to his Prayers, and dispenses him from coming to Rome, because of his Infirmary.

In the Twenty Eighth, Peter Abbot of Cluny intreats Pope Innocent, not to take the Prior of Veze-lay out of his Monastery, to make him Bishop of Langres.

The Thirty First is written to William Bishop of Orange, who had interdicted the Monastery of Puy, because the Monks retain'd a Church which had been given them by the Predecessor of that Bishop. Peter of Cluny, prays him to do them Justice, if not, to appoint a day wherein he would have the Affair discuss'd before the Pope's Legat.

The Thirty Third is written to Atto Bishop of Troyes about the Difference which had been between him and the Bishop of Auxerre, about the Ordinations of several Monks of the Order of Cluny, made at La Charité upon the Loire. Peter of Cluny was willing to send him the Privileges of the Holy See, which allow the Monks of Cluny to be Ordain'd by what Bishop they pleas'd, when he once could understand that this Affair was adjusted. He desires he would be pleas'd to send him an account thereof, and writes to him about two other private Affairs, the latter of which relates to a Clerk of his Church nam'd Guarin, who desir'd to have the first vacant Prebend conferr'd upon him.

The next Letter is written to the same Bishop, about Gebwin his Arch-Deacon, who was gone to Rome about some Difference which he had with his Bishop. In his Journey he stop'd at Cluny, and had promis'd Peter to return to Troyes, and adjust Matters with his Bishop.

Atto in the Thirty Fifth Letter returns an Answer to the foregoing Letter.

The following Letters of Peter of Cluny contain nothing in them of moment, till you come to the Seventh of the Third Book; wherein he replies to the Questions which had been propos'd to him by one of his Monks nam'd Gregory, who was a great Student. The first Question was, whether the Virgin Mary had received an Increase of Grace, in receiving the Holy Ghost with the Apostles on the day of Pentecost. Peter of Cluny replies, that she had received no increase of Charity or of sanctifying Grace, since throughout her whole Life, she had a fulness of Grace and Sanctity; but that she might have receiv'd an Augmentation of some particular Gifts, such as Knowledge, Prophecy, the power of working Miracles, of speaking several Tongues, which yet was not very certain. The second Question is, how the Virgin Mary could possibly be ignorant of any thing after she had conceived the Son of God. Peter of Cluny proves, that she was ignorant of a great many things, nor is he of Opinion, that she had such a perfect Knowledge of God, as the Angels and Souls of good Men made Blessed have; and he positively denies, that here below she enjoy'd Beatitude, though he owns that she had more Knowledge and Wisdom with respect to Spiritual things, than all other Mortals. The third Question is upon a passage of St. Gregory, wherein that Father seems to assert that the Word was united to the Manhood, before it was born of the Virgin Mary. Peter of Cluny says, that this passage has given some an occasion of asserting, that our Lord brought down his Humanity from Heaven, which is entirely contrary to the Sentiment of St. Gregory, who explains his Thoughts by saying, that though Jesus Christ was not yet born of the Virgin, yet the Union of the Person of the Divine Logos with the Manhood was already typified and foretold, though it was not as yet known or reveal'd.

[We cannot but here observe, that this is one of the most modest accounts of the Perfections of the Virgin Mary to be met with among any Romanists, and such as does not at all favour the Notions of some of the modern Papists.]

In the Third Letter of the Fourth Book, he writes to Pope Innocent in favour of Lewis the Younger, King of France, and intreats him to have some condescension for him. If his Youth had inclin'd him to do any thing that was not convenient. This was written upon the occasion of the Difference between that Prince and the Arch-Bishop of Bourges. He likewise gave the Pope to understand, that the Monastery of Luxeu, which he would have reform'd the last Year, by sending thither several Monks of Cluny, was still wholly irregular, and in a worse Condition than before.

The Fourth is that Letter which he wrote to the same Pope about Abaelard.

By the Fifth, he recommends to that Pope a Canon of Lions nam'd Heracius.

In the Seventh, he writes again to that Pope in favour of Aynulphus, Arch-Deacon of Sege, Elected and Consecrated Bishop of Lizeux, that the Pope might confirm him in spite of the Attempts made by the Count of Angers, to the contrary.

In the Eighth, he complains to Milo Bishop of Terrouanne, for his having publicly declaim'd in his Church against the Monks of Cluny, accusing them of being Proud and Disobedient to Bishops. He shews him, that if he had any thing to say against their Conduct, he ought to let them know of it, and reprove them for it privately, and not to declaim against them so publicly. Afterwards he clears them of the Accusation, and complains that that Bishop had hinder'd the bestowing a Canonship of Abbeville on them, though it did not belong to his Diocess, but to the Diocess of Amiens.

In the Ninth, he recommends to Pope Innocent the Bishop of Salamanca, Arch-Bishop Elect of Compostella, and intreats him to approve of this Translation.

In the Tenth, he intreats him to grant Hugh Arch-Bishop of Tours, leave to return to his Arch-Bishoprick. For Hugh in his Journey to Rome fell sick in the Monastery of La Charite, where he had taken upon him the Habit of that Order.

In the Eleventh, he exhorts the Arch-Bishop of Narbonne, who was very old and infirm, to quit his Arch-Bishoprick, and to retire to Cluny. This Letter was written from Spain, to which place he had travelled.

The Sixteenth is the Two Hundred and Twenty Eighth Letter of St. Bernard, to which Peter of Cluny reply'd by the Seventeenth, which is likewise the Two Hundred and Twenty Ninth of St. Bernard's Letters, of which we have given you an Abstract. Peter of Cluny does therein at first declare, that the Difference which had been between them, whether about the Bishoprick of Langres, or for Tenthos, had abated nothing of the Charity, Friendship or Esteem which he had for him. In the close of this Letter he sends him word, that he therewith sent him a Version of the Alcoran, which he had translated whilst he was in Spain, to shew the Errors and Follies of the Mahometan Religion. Afterwards he gives him a short account of Mahomet and of his Doctrine.

The Eighteenth is a Letter of Compliment to Pope Celestine, upon his Advancement to the Papedom.

The Nineteen is written to Pope Lucius, to whom he likewise made several Compliments, and asked him whether he should send him the thirteen Religious, according as he had order'd him when he was at Rome. This Pope by the next Letters return'd him Answer, that he would do him a great Favour in so doing.

The Twenty First is that which he wrote to Heloissa, upon the Death of Abaelard.

The Twenty Second is written to Lucius, in favour of the Bishop of Orleans, who was accus'd by several of his Clergy.

By the Twenty Fourth, he recommends to him the Religious whom he sent him.

In the Twenty Fifth, he wrote to Pope Eugenius III. in favour of the Arch-Bishop of Besancon.

In the Twenty Seventh, he exhorts Atto Bishop of Troyes to retire to Cluny.

In the Thirtieth, he blames those who caus'd to be sung or recited such Hymns or Histories in the Church, as are full of Fictions; and he says that not long ago he was very much put to the Blush in being forc'd to hear Sung, and to sing himself in the Church an Hymn in Honour of St. Benedict, which contains twenty falsities at least, without mentioning the Impropriety of the Language, and the falseness of Quantity; which had engaged him to make another Hymn in Honour of that Saint.

The Thirty Sixth is written to King Lewis the Young, exhorting him to punish the Jews, not by putting them to Death, but by taking away from them such effects as they had unjustly gotten by their Usuries and Extortion.

In the Fourth Letter of the Fifth Book, he writes to Pope Eugenius III. the Causes which the Abbot of la Chaise-Dieu alledg'd against the Arch-Bishop of Aries, and the Bishop of Viviers, nominated by his Holiness to take Cognizance of the Difference which was between the Bishop of Nismes and that Abbey.

In the Fifth he wrote to the same Pope, about the refusal which the Arch-Bishop of Bourdeaux had made of ordaining him, who had been elected Bishop of Angoulême.

In the seventh, he replies to several questions which had been propos'd to him by Thibald Abbot of St. Colomba of Sens. Among the rest was this, Why they repeat the Unction of the Sick at Cluny. Peter the Venerable says, that the Case is not the same with the Unction of the Sick, as with the Unctions of Baptism and Confirmation, whose Efficacy is simple and only One; nor the same as with the sacerdotal Unction, or the Unctions of Churches and Holy Vessels, which imprint a Consecration which can never be effac'd. Whereas the effect of the Unction of the Sick being only Remission of Sins, wherein Men fall after they are recovered of their Sickness, it ought to be repeated in the next Sickness.

The Sixth Book contains several Letters of Peter of Cluny to St. Bernard, and of St. Bernard to Peter of Cluny, of which the fourth is somewhat remarkable. Peter of Cluny therein intreats St. Bernard to procure an Union between the Monks of Cluny and of Cisteaux, by ordering that whenever the Monks of Cluny should come into the Monasteries of those of Cisteaux, they might be entertain'd as the Monks of the Monastery, and admitted into the Refectory; the Dormitory, and the other Regular Places.

There are likewise in the same Book several Letters to Pope Eugenius III. in one of which (viz. the Ninth) he assures him that the Arch-Bishop of Vienna does not at all oppose the Interests of the Order of Cluny, as the Pope had suppos'd, and sent him word in the preceeding Letter.

In the Twelfth, he advertises him of the Division which was in Chartreux the Great, upon occasion of a Person Elected to the Bishoprick of Grenoble.

In the Twenty Fifth, he gives him to understand of the Irregularities of the Bishop of Clermont.

In the Twenty Seventh he wrote to him in favour of Humbert of Beaujeu, who returning from beyond Sea, was settled in the Neighbourhood of Cluny, and had put a stop to the Wars and Robberies committed there in his Absence, and had quieted all the Country thereabouts; but because he had quitted the Order of Knights Templars, and taken his Wife again, the Pope could not endure that he should live in the World. Peter of Cluny in this Letter remonstrates to him, that it was very proper for for him to use his Indulgence towards this Lord, and to grant him a Dispensation of living with his Wife, and of leading a secular Life.

In the Twenty Eighth he wrote to him against the Provost, Abbot, and other Ecclesiastical Lords of Brioude, who had turned a Clerk out of his Church, and his demeanours without any form of Justice, nay, so much as denying him to clear himself by the Tryal of Fire, as he had offered them to do.

Peter the Venerable Abbot of Cluny.

The Forty Second, Forty Third, Forty Fourth, and Forty Fifth Letters are likewise written to Eugenius III. The first in favour of the Abbot of Brems, and the second in favour of Guy Lord of Domus, who had been interdicted by the Pope, for having married a second Wife in the Life time of his first. Peter of Cluny shews the Pope the Reasons upon which he believes that the first Marriage ought not to stand, and prays him to determine this Affair according to this Remonstrance, and to take off the Interdiction which he had issued out against this Lord. The Third is in favour of the People of Placenza, who were unwilling to admit of a Bishop, consecrated by the Arch-Bishop of Ravenna, and they thought they had reason for it, because they were to admit of no Bishop but who was sent by the Pope: In the last, he acquaints the Pope of a Treaty which he had made with a Lord of his Neighbourhood.

The Fifteenth Letter of this Book, is a circular Letter written by Peter of Cluny, to all the Superiors of the Houses of his Order, wherein he warmly reproveth the Abuse which was established among the greatest part of his Religious, of eating Meat every day in the Week except Friday. He shews, that this was forbidden by the Rule of St. Benedict, which enjoyns them to eat nothing but Fish, and by the Example and Institution of Odo, one of the Founders of their Order.

The Seventeenth, Eighteenth, Nineteenth and Twentieth Letters, are about the Croisade. Peter of Cluny had been invited by Sugerus Abbot of St. Denys, and by St. Bernard to meet at that Assembly which was to be held at Chartres upon this Design, he excuses himself from coming by two of his Letters, but withal commends that design.

In the Twenty Sixth written to Everard, Grand-Master of the Order of Knight Templars, he commends their Institution, and interceeds for Humbert of Beaujeu, who had left them.

The Thirty Ninth written to his Nieces, is in commendation of a Virgin Life.

The Seventh Book contains three Letters written by Peter of Cluny, to Sugerus Abbot of St. Denys, an Answer of that Abbot; three Letters of St. Bernard, and one Letter of Peter of Celles, written to Peter of Cluny.

Besides the Letters we have already mentioned, there are a great many others, which are either Letters of Compliment, or on Affairs of little Moment, and several other Moral ones about the Spiritual Monastick Life, such as the Ninth and Tenth of the first Book; the Twelfth, Fifteenth, Twenty Second, and Fiftieth of the Second; the Fourteenth, Thirty Ninth, Fourtieth, Forty First and Forty Second of the Fourth Book; the third of the Fifth; and the Thirteenth and Fourteenth of the Sixth. All these Letters are penn'd with a great deal of Purity and pleasantness of Style, full of Life and solid Thoughts. They are not indeed so Airy as the Letters of St. Bernard, nor so full of Turns and playing upon Words, but the Style is more Correct, Even and Pure.

These Letters are follow'd by the Tracts of Peter of Cluny.

The first is dedicated to Peter of St. John's, who in a Conference which they had together, had told him, that some of those with whom he convers'd, had asserted that Jesus Christ is not expressly call'd God in the Gospel. Peter of Cluny in this Treatise, proves the contrary from all those Passages in the Gospel where Jesus Christ is stiled God, and has such Attributes apply'd to him, as belong to none but God.

The Second Tract is against the Jews, wherein he proves the Divinity of Jesus Christ, that he is the Messias who had been foretold by the Prophets, and refutes several Fables of the Jewish Talmud.

To these two Tracts are annexed two Prefaces, the one is Peter's of Cluny, and the other Robert's of Redines, upon the Version of the Alcoran, with an Abridgment of the History and Errors of Mahomet. The Five Books which Peter of Cluny has compos'd against the Alcoran, have not as yet been printed.

We shall speak of the Treatise against the Petrobians, when we come to treat of those Hereticks.

The two Books of Miracles contain the Relation of a great many Miracles that happened in his time. In the second we meet with the Life of Matthew Prior of St. Martin in the Fields, and afterwards Bishop of Albani, and the Account of the Contest between Pontius and Peter the Venerable, about the Abbey of Cluny.

Of the Four Sermons penn'd by Peter of Cluny, we have only that about the Transfiguration remaining.

The pieces of Poetry which we have of his, are an Apology in Hexameters, or Pentameters against those who found fault with the Verses of Peter of Poitiers; several pieces of Prose on the Life of Jesus Christ, on the Resurrection, in Honour of the Blessed Virgin, upon St. Mary Magdalen, and in praise of Hugh Abbot of Cluny. Two Hymns, one on the Festival of St. Benedict, and the other upon the translation of his Body; and several Epitaphs on Count Eustachius, Bernard Prior of Cluny, Reginald Arch-Bishop of Lyons, and Peter Abaelard. It had been well if he had written as well in Verse as in Prose.

Peter of Cluny made likewise a Collection of the Statutes of his Order, which were made whilst he was Abbot, and at the end of each Statute, has explain'd the Reason of their being enacted. These statutes relate to the Divine Service, to Faits, the form of Habits, and several other Customs of the Monks of that Fraternity.

Father Maillon in the third Tome of his Analeſts, p. 481. has given us two Letters of this Author, of the Aſſociation of Prayers for the Dead, between thoſe of Chartres, and the Senators of Venice.

CHAP. VI.

An Account of the Heresies which prevailed in the Twelfth Century.

The Heresies of the Twelfth Century.

An account of the Heretic Henry.

WE have already observed, that in the beginning of the foregoing Century, there appeared in several parts of France, such Hereticks as were accus'd of impious Doctrines, who openly attack'd the Sacraments of the Church, and subverted its most sacred Rites and Ceremonies. The Severity with which those who were taken were condemn'd, did not prevent the Sect from spreading further, nor this Doctrine or some such like, from over-running the Kingdom, so that in this Century, a great many Hereticks appeared, whose chief Aim was to divert Men from the receiving of the Sacraments, and to overthrow the Hierarchy and Discipline of the Church.

The first who appeared were Peter of Bruis, and an Hermit nam'd Henry, his Disciple. They first began to broach their Doctrine in Provence, from whence the latter went to Lausune, and afterwards into the Country of Mans. We will give you the Description which the Historian of the Bishops of Mans made of him, in speaking of Hildebert. "About this time there arose in that Country a certain Hypocrite, who for his wicked Actions, for his corrupt Morals, and for his abominable Doctrines, deserv'd the severest Punishments. This Man conceal'd the Rage of a Ravenous Wolf, under the appearances of an innocent Sheep. His Countenance and Eyes look'd like a ruffled and tempestuous Sea: He was as yet very young: He wore short Hair, his Beard shav'd, was large in stature, but very sorrowfully cloth'd; walk'd apace, and bare-footed even in the hardest time of Winter; he was pretty Affable, had a strong terrifying Voice, and liv'd in a manner quite different from others. His ordinary Retreats were the Cottages of Peasants; he liv'd all day under Portico's; eat and slept on some Hill or other in the open Air, and had acquir'd a great Reputation of Sanctity. The Women applauded him, cry'd him up for a great Servant of God, and gave out that no person could have a greater Faculty than him of converting the most obdurate Hearts; and that he was endued with the Spirit of Prophecy, to discern the most inward recesses of the Conscience, and the most private Sins. This Fame having rendred him very desirable in the Diocese of Mans. He sent thither two of his Associates and Disciples, who liv'd in the same manner as he did. Those Men arrived at Mans on Ash-Wednesday, where they were received by the People as Angels. In imitation of their Master they carry'd Staffs, on the top of which was an Iron Cross, and they wore the Dress of Penitents. Bishop Hildebert was surpriz'd at the Sight, and received them kindly. He just upon his departure for Rome, ordered his Arch-Deacons to give Henry leave to come into his Diocese, and permit him to preach to the People. He was no sooner come, but they flock'd from all parts to hear his Sermons, and the Clergy themselves excited the People thereto. He had a Natural Eloquence, and a Tone of Voice resembling Thunder. He soon spread his Errors in his Sermons, and stirr'd up the People against the Clergy, so that a great many Ecclesiasticks were abus'd by them. The Chapter of Mans perceiving this Disorder, wrote to him, and gave him notice by one of the Canons, that they prohibited him from preaching any more, either in publick or private within their Diocese. The People had like to have kill'd the Canon who brought him this Message, and Henry continued to preach in the Churches of St. Germain and St. Vincent. He taught, that the Women who had not liv'd continently, ought to strip themselves, to burn their Hair, and to renounce their worldly Goods, to lead a Life of Poverty, by marrying likewise poor Men. 'Tis easie to guess how much disturbance such a Doctrine put in Practice would raise in the Diocese. Hildebert being returned from Rome, Henry retired into the Castle of Calais, and continued there to vent his Doctrines, and the People still follow'd him, and were so far insatuated, that they would scarce acknowledge their Bishop, or receive his Benediction. The Bishop to undeceive the People, went to Henry, and entering into a Conference with him, ask'd him what profession he was of. He answered him that he was a Deacon. The Bishop asked him whether he had assist'd that day at Divine Service? He said no; then reply'd the Bishop, let us say our Matins. Henry declared that he could not say his Office; the Bishop began to recite the Psalms of the Office of the Virgin-Mary; but Henry was still as ignorant as ever, so that being in a Confusion, was forc'd to own that he knew nothing at all, but that he had made it his Study to make Discourses to the People. Hildebert having gain'd the Conquest over him, prohibited him from preaching or staying any longer in his Diocese. Two of his Disciples nam'd Cyprian and Peter, recanted and left him; after they understood that his Life was infamous, and his Doctrine Heretical, as Hildebert informs us in his 78th. Letter. All this happened about the Year 1110.

Whilst Henry preach'd in France, Peter of Bruis continued likewise to publish his Errors in Provence. The Errors of Peter the Venerable Abbot of Cluny, who has refuted them, makes mention of five. (1.) His denying that Baptism was of any advantage to Infants, and maintaining that only adult Persons ought to be Baptized; a Doctrine which they put in practice by Re-baptizing all those who initiated themselves into their Sect. (2.) His condemning the use of Churches, Temples and Altars, and beating them down. (3.) His rejecting the Worship of Crosses, and breaking them. (4.) His believing that the Mass was useless, and that none are oblig'd to celebrate it. (5.) His Teaching, that Alms and Prayers for the Dead are of no avail, and forbidding to sing the Praises of God. He likewise takes Notice that a great great many accus'd them of wholly rejecting all the Canonical Books of the Old and New Testament, and of not believing either in Jesus Christ, or the Prophets, or the Apostles; but he would not impute the Error to them, which was only attributed to them by common Fame. 'Tis no hard matter to comprehend how much Trouble such a seditious Doctrine must needs raise both in Church and State. In Provence there was nothing else to be seen but Christians Re-baptized, Churches Prophan'd or Destroy'd, Altars pull'd down, and Crosses burnt. The Laws of the Church were publicly violated, the Priests beaten, abus'd and forc'd to marry, and all the most sacred Ceremonies of the Church abolish'd. These Disorders excited the Zeal of the Bishops of that Country, who with the assistance of the Princes drove out this Heretick, and put a stop to the fury of his Followers. But he went from thence into Languedoc, where he vented the same Errors at Tholouse, and in other Cities, till he was apprehended and burnt alive at St. Giles's in Languedoc.

His Disciple Henry who was likewise returned to Languedoc, after he had been driven out of Mons, preach'd there the same Doctrine, and added thereto several new Errors, so that within a short time, that Country was so infested with those detestable Maxims, that there were to be seen (as St. Bernard says) a great many Churches without People, a great many People without Priests, a great many Priests despised by their People, and a great many Christians without Jesus Christ. The Churches there were become like so many Synagogues; the Sanctuary was divested of its Sanctity; the Sacraments looked upon as profane things; the Festivals lost their Solemnity; Men dy'd in their Sins, without Absolution, and without receiving the Communion, Baptism was deny'd to Infants; they divided the Prayer and Sacrifices for the Dead, and the invocation of Saints; the Excommunications of Bishops, the Pilgrimages made for the sake of Devotion, the Consecration of the Holy Chrism and of the Holy Oyls. And in a Word, a general Contempt was cast on all the Ceremonies and Customs of the Church. St. Bernard brought into that Country by Alberic, Cardinal Bishop of Ostia, and Legat of the Holy See; put a stop to those Disorders, and undeceiv'd part of the People by his Preaching and his Miracles. Henry thought of making his escape, but was apprehended and carry'd in Chains to Tholouse, and put into the Bishop's Hands. St. Bernard undertook the Journey in the Year 1147.

'Tis very probable that the Hereticks of Perigueux were the Disciples of Peter de Bruts and of Henry. We will give you an account which a Contemporary Monk nam'd Herbert has left us of them in a Letter address'd to all Christians, wherein he admonishes them to beware of these false Prophets. "There are (says he) in the Country of Perigueux a great many Hereticks, who boast that they lead an Apostolical Life, eat no Flesh, and drink no Wine, unless in a very little quantity, and that from one three days end to another, who fall upon their Knees an hundred times a day, and receive no Money. Their Sect is very Corrupt and Hypocritical; they do not say the Gloria Patri; but instead of it say, because yours is the Kingdom, and you have a Power over all Creatures for ever and ever, Amen. They make no account of Alms-giving, because they believe that no Man ought to possess any thing as his own Property. They bear no regard to the Mass, and teach that one ought not to receive the Communion, but only a piece of Bread. If any one of 'em out of Hypocrisy says Mass, he never recites the Canon, nor receives the Communion, but throws the Host besides the Altar, or into the Missal. They do not adore Crosses or Crucifixes, and condemn those of Idolatry who do them any Honour. This Sect is mightily increased, and not only a great many Persons of Quality leave their Estates to be of their Number, but likewise a great many Ecclesiasticks, and a great many Religious of both Sexes follow them. The most stupid and senseless among them, within less than eight days time became very expert and fit to teach, and be examplars to the rest. 'Tis a hard matter to take them, for wherever they be apprehended, the Devil helps them out of Prison again. They do work some Miracles, such as filling a Vessel with Wine, by pouring some drops of Water into it. The chief of this Sect is called Pontius; St. Bernard in his Journey confronted likewise these Hereticks.

About the same time Tancheline vented the same Errors in Flanders. He was a Laick who ventured to preach, and became so proud, that he caus'd extraordinary Respects to be paid him, and he carry'd his extravagant Folly so far, that (if we may believe Abaelard in the Case) he caus'd himself to be styl'd by the People the Son of God, and a Temple to be built in Honour of him. That which is more certain, is that he taught "that the Churches were only places of Prostitution; that the Eucharist which the Priests consecrated signified nothing. That the Sacraments were rather Abominations than sacred things; that the efficacy of the Sacraments depended on the Sanctity of the Ministers. The Bishop of Tournay established in the Church of St. Michael, a Congregation of twelve Ecclesiasticks to oppose these Errors. This Church was afterwards bestowed on St. Norbert. Tancheline went as far as Rome with a Priest nam'd Evervachier, who was one of his principal Followers. 'Tis not known what became of him afterwards, but for the Priest he returned to Utrecht, where he made a great many Disciples. The Bishop of Utrecht sent word thereof to Frederick Arch-Bishop of Cologne, who oppos'd the Heresie in its very Birth, which began to spread it self in his Diocese, as is observ'd in the Letter of the Church of Utrecht to that Arch-Bishop.

In spite of all his endeavours it was established there, and there continued, as we are informed by a Letter of Enervin, Provost of Stemfeld near Cologne written to St. Bernard, wherein he gives him to understand, that within a short time they had discovered several Hereticks near that City, some whereof had abjur'd their Errors; and two others having maintain'd them obstinately, had been burnt by the People. These Hereticks taught, that they were the only Persons among whom the true Church had subsisted, because they alone had follow'd the Example of Jesus Christ, and had possess'd nothing of this Worlds Goods. They forb'd the eating of Milk meats, and the Flesh of Beasts. They would not discover what their Sacraments were; however they had own'd that they believe that the Bread and Wine which they did eat every Day was consecrated by the Lord's Prayer, for the nourishment of those who were the Members and the Body of Jesus Christ, that in this Sense it became the Body of Jesus Christ; that Others had not the true Sacraments but only the Appearance of them, and that they held a false Tradition of men. They admitted of a Baptism by Fire and the Holy Ghost as more Excellent than the Baptism of Water, for which they had no great Esteem. They believ'd that their Elect had a power of Baptizing and Consecrating. They distinguish'd three sorts of Persons among them, Hearers, Believers and the Elect. Lastly they condemn'd Marriage without giving any reason for it.

The same Author likewise takes notice that there were likewise in that Country several other Hereticks different from the former, (who had been even instrumental in discovering them) who deny'd that the Body of Jesus Christ was Consecrated on the Altar, because all the Priests of the Church are not Consecrated, and that the Ministry is corrupted by the secular and prophane lives of the Ecclesiasticks: That therefore they have no other power than to teach and Preach, and that all their Sacraments are Null except the Baptism of Adult persons; for they did not believe that Infants ought to be baptiz'd. They likewise taught that only Marriages contracted between a Man and Maiden were lawful, and that all others were no better than Fornication. They had no trust or Confidence on the Mediation of Saints. They Asserted that Fasts and other Mortifications were not at all necessary for the Sult, no nor for sinners themselves. They styl'd all the Usages of the Church which were not Establish'd by Jesus Christ and the Apostles, Superstitions. They deny'd Purgatory, and maintain'd that the Souls departed immediately went into the Place allotted for them, and by consequence they render'd the Prayers and Sacrifices of the Church for the Dead Null and Void.

These are the Errors which Enervin attributes to those two Sorts of Hereticks to oppose which he excites the Zeal of Saint Bernard, who at that time in discoursing upon these Words in the Canticles, Take us the little Foxes, took an occasion from this Text to write against those Modern Hereticks, whom he compares to Foxes. At the First he represents their Morals in the 65th Sermon, wherein he accuses them of Being Proud; 1 lovers of Novelty; of making no scruple to swear and forswear themselves; of concealing their Mysteries; of leading dissolute Lives; of being too familiar with marry'd Women and Maids; of being Cheats and Hypocrites. Afterwards in the 86th Sermon he refutes in particular their Errors about Marriage, Abstaining from Meats, Infant-Baptism, Purgatory, Prayers for the Dead, the Efficacy of Sacraments and the like. Lastly he speaks of their false Constancy which made them suffer Death and the greatest Torments: and he reproves several Princes, and even several Bishops who tolerated those Hereticks by receiving presents from them. Those Sermons of Saint Bernard were written about the year 1140. which serves to fix the Epocha of the time wherein those Hereticks of Cologne first appear'd.

These are the same Hereticks whom sometime after Eckbert Abbot of St. Florin in the Diocess of Treves oppos'd in his Tracts dedicated to Reginald Arch-Bishop of Cologne. He had often had Conferences with them whilst he was Canon in the Church of Bonne, and whereas they were frequently discovered to be in the Diocess of Cologne, he thought himself oblig'd to expose their Errors and refute them. This is what he has done in his six Discourses which are to be met with in the Bibliotheca Patrum. He therein takes notice that those Hereticks in Germany were call'd Cathari, in Flanders Pipbri, in France Fisserani, and makes them to be the off-spring of the Manichees. We will now give you an Account of the Errors which he attributes to them and refutes in those Discourses. "They condemn (says he) Marriage, and threaten Damnation to those who dy'd in a marry'd state. Some among them only condemn such Marriages as are contracted between any beside such as have never been marry'd. They eat no flesh because they believe it to be unclean; which is the Reason which they give of it publicly; but in private they say that Flesh is the Devils Creature. They have divers Opinions about Baptism: some of them say that 'tis of no use to Infants: in secret they add that the Baptism with Water is of no avail, for which reason they re-baptize those who enter into their Sect in a particular Way, and assert that 'tis the Baptism of the Holy Ghost and of Fire. They Believe that the Souls of the Departed enter the very day of their Death into a State of Everlasting Happiness or of Everlasting Misery; and do not believe Purgatory: By consequence they reject the Prayers, the Alms, and the Masses for the Dead. If they come to Church, hear Mass, and communicate there, 'tis only for show; for they suppose that the Sacerdotal Order is utterly extinct in the Church and only subsists in their Sect. They do not believe that the Body of Jesus Christ is Consecrated on the Altar, but call their own Flesh the Body of Jesus Christ, and in taking of Food say, that they make the Body of Jesus Christ. I have heard (adds He) from a man who had left their Sect, after he had discover'd the Turpitude and the Errors thereof, that they asserted that Jesus Christ was not born of the Virgin; that he had not real Flesh; that he did not rise again really, but in a Figure: he believ'd that 'tis for this Reason that they keep not Easter, but have another Festival which they call Bema. Lastly he accuses them also of teaching that the Souls of Men are those Apostate Angels who were turn'd out of Heaven.

The Hereticks of Toul.

This Sect had likewise some Followers in the Diocess of Toul, as we are inform'd by the Letter of Hugh Metellus, a Regular Canon of that Diocess, written to his Bishop Henry, wherein he gives him to understand that in his Diocess there were dangerous men who began to start up, whom one might rather stile Beasts than Men, because they led a Life wholly Brutal: who detest Marriage; abominate Baptism; deride the Sacraments, and Abhor the Name of Christian.

In Italy there were likewise Hereticks of the same Nature, who went under the Name of The Heretics of Cathari. Bona-cursus, who had been formerly one of their Teachers at Milan; has given us a Tract of them after his Conversion, publish'd by Father Luke Dachery in the Thirteenth Tome of his Spicilegium. He therein lays that some of them maintain'd that God created all the Elements: that others say, It was the Devil who created them; but that they all believ'd that it was the Devil who separated and rang'd them in their Order: That they likewise believ'd that it was he who fram'd the Body of Adam out of the Clay of the Earth, and that he therein infus'd an Angel of Light: that he likewise made Eve, and lying with her, begat Cain of her Body: That they assert that the Fruit which Adam was forbidden to Eat, was the Carnal Knowledge of Eve: That they maintain that all the Bodies which are in the Air, on the Earth, and in the Water were made by the Devil: That it was the Devil who appear'd to the Patriarchs, and who is the God of the Old Testament whom they reject: That they likewise condemn St. John Baptist: That they Teach that Jesus Christ had not a Body animated with a Soul, and that he neither drank, or Eat, or did any other humane Action really, but only in appearance: That they did not believe either his descent into Hell, or his Resurrection, or his Ascension: That they do not believe him to be Equal to the Father: That they affirm that the Cross is the Character of the Beast: That Saint Silvester is Antichrist: that ever since the Pontificate of that Pope the Church had been extinct; and that no person could be sav'd in a Marry'd State: That they condemn the Holy Fathers: That they forbid the Eating of Flesh, Eggs, Milk and every thing else that proceeds from Animals: That they do not believe that the holy Spirit is conferr'd by the Baptism of Water; nor that the Visible Substance of the Bread and Wine is chang'd into the Body and Blood of Jesus Christ; and that they assert that all those who swear shall be damn'd: That they say that no man can be sav'd but by Imposition of Hands, which they stile Baptism: That they assert that the Sun is the Devil; that the Moon is Eve, who Ly together as Man and Wife once a Month: That all the Stars are Dæmons; and Lastly that no man can be sav'd, unless he be of their Sect.

The same Author speaks of other Hereticks whom he calls Passagians, who Taught that one ought to observe the Law of Moses even in the Literal Sense; and that the Sabbath, Circumcision, and the other Ceremonial practices of the Law ought to be still in force: That Jesus Christ was not equal to his Father: That the Father, Son, and Holy Ghost were distinct Substances.

Lastly he speaks of the Arnoldists, the Disciples of Arnold Native of Bresse, who went from Italy into France, where he was the Scholar of Peter Abaelard. Upon his Return to his own Country he took upon him the Habit of a Monk, and his head was full of this thought, that neither the Pope nor the Clergy ought to hold any Demeans. Upon this Footing he set himself to preach, that the Clerks who held any Demeans, as their own Property, the Bishops who were possess'd of Royalties, and the Monks who enjoy'd any Lands could not be sav'd; that all those things appertain'd to Princes. Beside this, he taught the same Errors as other Hereticks, about Infant-Baptism and the Sacrament of the Altar. He was forc'd out of Italy by Pope Innocent II. and oblig'd to retire into Switzerland. After that Pope's Death he return'd into Italy and went directly to Rome, where he stirr'd up a Sedition against Pope Eugenius III. and afterwards against Adrian IV. who interdicted the People of Rome till such time as they had drove out that Heretick and his Followers. This Menace had its Effect; the Romans seiz'd upon the strong Houses which those Hereticks kept in, and forc'd them to retire to Otricoli in Tuscany, where they were kindly receiv'd by the People, who look'd upon Arnold as a Prophet. However he was apprehended sometime after by Cardinal Gerard, and in spite of the Endeavours of the Vicounts of Campania, was brought to Rome, and condemn'd by the Governor of that City to be ry'd to a stake and burnt to Ashes, for fear the People should pay any Honour to his Relicks.

Thirty of those Hereticks cross'd over from France into England about the year 1160. where they would likewise willingly have sown the same Doctrine. But they were apprehended and exterminated, and communicated that Error only to one Woman, who recanted. The Author which makes mention of this takes notice that they were call'd Publicans or Publicans. William of Malmesbury the Historian, who did not live much after this time, says that those Hereticks being examin'd; answer'd pretty well about the Nature of the Heavenly Physician, namely Jesus Christ; but that when they were told of the Remedies which he has left us, namely the Sacraments, they then reply'd very ill, and declar'd that they condemn'd Baptism, the Eucharist, and Marriage; and that they despis'd the Catholick Unity.

All that we have hitherto related concerning the Hereticks of the Twelfth Century is taken out of Cotemporary Authors, and shews that two sorts of Errors were predominant at that Time; One sort common to all those Hereticks, and others were Peculiar. Their Common Errors regarded the Sacraments, the Practices of the Church, and the Hierarchical Order, against which they had all conspir'd. The particular Errors were such as had some relation to Manicheism, to Arianism, and other Impieties into which many had been led by a strange sort of Blindness.

These Hereticks were condemn'd in several Councils. The first which pass'd a Law against them was that of Toulouse in the Year 1119. held in the presence of Calixtus II. the third Canon whereof runs thus. We Condemn and turn out of the Church of God as Hereticks those who under pretence of Religion reject the Sacrament of the Body and Blood of Jesus Christ, Infant Baptism, Priesthood, Holy Orders, and Lawful Marriages. We enjoin that they be suppress'd by the year 1119.

The Condemnation of the Hereticks in the Council of Toulouse the Secular Powers. We subject their Defenders under the same Commendation, if they do not repent. This Canon was repeated in the same Words and confirm'd in the second general Lateran Council held under Innocent II. in the year 1139. in the 23d Canon.

*The Condemnation
of the same in the Synod of Oxford.* Those who went into England were convicted and Condemn'd in an Assembly of Bishops held at Oxford in the Reign of Henry II. King of England in the year 1160. This Prince order'd them to be branded with a Red hot Iron in their Cheek, to be whip'd publicly, to be driv'n out of the City half-naked, and left them to be starv'd to Death.

*Their con-
Council of
Tours.* The Council of Tours held in the year 1163. enjoyns that for the suppressing of that Herefy which spread it self in Gascogne and in other Provinces, all those should be Anathematiz'd who held any Correspondence with those Hereticks: That the Princes should confiscate their Goods, and prevent their Meeting.

*The Council
to the He-reticks.* In the year 1176. A Solemn Sentence was pass'd in a synod held at Lombex against several of those Hereticks; going then under the Name of Bons hommes, who had been apprehended by the Inhabitants of that City. The Judges pitch'd upon by both Parties were Girald Bishop of Albi, Gaucelin of Lodeba, the Abbot of Castro, and three other Abbots, and Judgment was pass'd in the presence of Pontius Arch-Bishop of Narbonne, Arnulphus Bishop of Nismes, the Arch-Bishop of Toulouse, the Bishop of Agda, several Abbots and Superiors of Monasteries who were at the Synod. The Bishop of Lodeba by the Order of the Bishop of Albi, interregreted them Bons hermeticks, and in the first place ask'd them, whether they receiv'd the Law of Moses, the Prophets and the Books of the Old and New Testament. They reply'd that they did not receive the Law of Moses, nor the Prophets nor the Psalms, nor any part of the Old Testament; but only the Gospels, the Epistles of Saint Paul, the Seven Canonical Epistles, the Acts of the Apostles and the Apocalypse. In the Second place he demanded of them an Explanation of their Faith: They return'd him Answer that they would not explain it unless they were constrain'd to do it. The third Question was about Infant-Baptism: They reply'd that they had nothing to say on that head. The Fourth Question was about the Eucharist, where and by whom it was Consecrated, who were the persons who receiv'd it, and whether it were better Consecrated by a Good than by a Wicked Priest. They return'd him Answer that those who receiv'd it unworthily should be damned, but withall averr'd that it might be Consecrated by any good man, whether Priest or Laick. The Fifth was about Marriage. They declar'd that they had nothing else to reply to that than what Saint Paul has said, viz. That a Man and Woman are joyn'd together to avoid Incontinence and Fornication. The Sixth Question was whether Repentance at the hour of Death could save any man; and whether one was oblig'd to confess ones Sins to the Priests, or whether one might confess them to Laicks. They reply'd that the Sick might confess them to whom they pleas'd: As to others they were not willing to determine any thing, because the Apostle Saint James speaks only of the Sick. Then they were ask'd whether Contrition and Confession alone were sufficient to obtain Remission of Sins, without thinking it necessary to make Satisfaction, to observe Penances, Fasts, Almsgiving, and other Austerities. They reply'd that the Apostle Saint James had order'd nothing else beside Confession as necessary to Salvation. They declar'd likewise without being ask'd, that they believ'd that one ought not to take an Oath: That all those who were ordain'd without having the Qualifications prescrib'd by Saint Paul for Bishops, were Wolves and Devourers, to whom no Obedience ought to be paid. Those Errors were refuted by Pontius Arch-Bishop of Narbonne, by Arnulphus Bishop of Nismes, and by two Abbots, which serv'd only as Testimonies of the New Testament. Afterwards the Judges declar'd these Bons hommes Heretical, condemn'd Oliver, and his Followers, and all who were of the same Opinion with the Hereticks of Lombex, and authoriz'd their Judgment by several Passages out of the Holy Scripture, oppos'd to the Errors which we have been relating. This Sentence was pronounc'd by the Bishop of Lodeba. Those Hereticks protested against it, by saying that the Bishop who had pronounc'd it was an Heretick, an Hypocrite, their Enemy, their Persecutor, and that they were ready to demonstrate by the Testimony of the Gospel and the Apostles, that neither he nor any of the Bishops were Pastors, but Mercenaries and Hirelings. The Bishop reply'd upon them that his Sentence was Juridical, and that he was ready to demonstrate in the Court of Pope Alexander, in the Court of Lewis King of France, and in that of the Count of Toulouse or of the Countess his present Wife, and of the Lord Trencavelle who was likewise there present, That those whom they had condemn'd were Hereticks. Upon this they being thus convinc'd turn'd about to the People, and declar'd that they would make a Profession of their Faith out of Charity, and for the Honour of the Assistants. The Bishop bid them observe that they did not say for the Honor of God, but for the Honor of the Assistants. They made profession of all the Articles of the Creed, and added that they acknowledg'd that they ought to confess with their Mouth the Faith which they conceiv'd in their Hearts: That they believ'd that no person was sav'd, unless he receiv'd the Body of Jesus Christ, which is not preserv'd but in the true Church; that none else beside Priests had Power of Consecrating it; and that the Bad consecrated it as well as the Good; that no Body could be sav'd without Baptism, and that Infants are sav'd by this Sacrament; That Men and Women may be sav'd tho' in a Married State: That every one ought to receive with Heart and Mouth Repentance from the Priest, and to be baptiz'd into the Church; and that Lastly they were ready to acknowledge all that could be demonstrated to them by the Authority of the Evangelists and the Epistles of the Apostles: The Bishop urg'd them to swear that they would keep to the Doctrine, and to declare whether they ever had any other Opinions. They reply'd that they could not swear, because the Gospel had prohibited all Oaths. The Bishop determin'd that they ought to swear, if they would be credited, and prov'd by several Instances taken out of the New Testament, that Oaths were not absolutely forbidden. They reply'd that the Bishop of Albi had promis'd them that they should not be oblig'd to swear at all. The Bishop of Albi deny'd that he had made them any such promise, and confirm'd the Sentence pronounc'd by the Bishop of Lodeva, which was sign'd by all the Assistants.

Some time after this there appear'd a great many of those Hereticks in Toulouse: The Pope's Legate went thither in the year 1178. attended by several Bishops. They constrain'd them to submit to publick Penance, raz'd the Forts wherein they met, Excommunicated and Banish'd those Hereticks who retir'd into Albigensis, where they were secure. For Roger Count of Albi Countenanc'd and made use of them in detaining the Bishop of his City Prisoner. From this time forward they went under the Common Title of Albigenses. There were a great Number of them not only in that Country, but likewise in all Languedoc and Gascogne. There were likewise Banditi in those Provinces without Law or Gospel, who ran about the Countrey, ravag'd, pillag'd and Massacred all without Distinction of Estate, Age or Sex; and in an especial manner Assaulted Churches and Monasteries; some of them were call'd Barbancons, others Aragonists, Navarrists and Bascani; others Cotteraux and Triverdini. The General Council of the Lateran held in the year 1179. Excommunicated all of them, prohibited the Interring them in holy Ground exhorted the Catholick Princes to wage War against them, to confiscate their Goods, and to make them slaves; granted to those who took up Arms against them proportionable to their Services and according to the Discretion of the Bishops, Excommunicated those who gave them any protection, suffered them in their Territories or had any Commerce with them.

That Council says that the Hereticks of Albi were call'd Cathari, Patarini, Publicans, and went under a great many other Names: which shews that they were descended from the Hereticks who appear'd in the Beginning of this Century, and were so call'd. The Publicans or Publicans held a great many Castles in Gascogne. In the year 1181. Henry Abbot of Clairvaux Bishop of Albi being in the Quality of Legate, rais'd a great many Troops, and went to give them a Visit. To divert this storm they pretended to Abjure their Errors; but the danger once past they follow'd their old Course of Life again.

This Infection spread it self in several Provinces on each side the Loire. One of those false Apostles nam'd Terrick, who lay a long time conceal'd in a Grott at Corbigny in the Diocess of Nevers, was taken and burnt. Several others suffer'd the same Punishment in other parts, particularly two old Women in the City of Troyes, to one of whom 'tis said that this Terrick gave the name of Church, and to the other the name of Saint Mary, that so when his followers were examin'd; they might swear by Saint Mary that they held no other Faith than that of the Holy Church.

These Publicans were likewise condemn'd in the Council held at Sens in the year 1198. which depos'd the Abbot of Saint Martin's of Nevers, and suspended the Dean of the Church of that City, accus'd of that Heresy, and refer'd them to the Holy See.

There was in the same Century a Visionary who was presented to Pope Eugenius III. at the opening of the Council of Rheims. He was a Gentleman of Bretagne nam'd Eon de l'Etoile, Eon de l'Etoile who was so Ignorant, that having heard it sung in the Church: Per Eum qui venturus est judicare vivos & Mortuos, he imagin'd and asserted that it was he who was to Judge the Quick and the Dead. He was follow'd as a great Prophet: sometimes walk'd with a great train of People at his heels, sometimes liv'd in Solitude, and afterwards appear'd in greater splendor than before. 'Tis said that he was a Magician and that to draw the Mob after him he made great Entertainments, but that they were meer Illusions, and that the Victuals which were eat at his Table, and the Presents which he made bewitch'd mens minds. The Arch-Bishop of Rheims having apprehended him, presented him to his Holiness, and the Council. His Answers were so full of Frensy and Enthusiasm, that they look'd upon him as a Fool, and shut him up in a close Prison, where he dy'd soon after. A great many of his Disciples a great deal more senseless than himself, chose rather to be burnt than to renounce him.

These were the Heretical Sects which appear'd in the Twelfth Century, and were so full of Extravagant Errors. If we enquire into the Causes of the Amazing Progress which they made in so short a time, we shall find that the Relaxation of Church Discipline, the Avarice and Covetousness of Ecclesiasticks, the Common Abuse which was made of the Sacraments, the Credulity and Ignorance of the People, the pretended Virtues of those new Preachers, and the Desire of Reformation contributed very much to the spreading of those Uptart Opinions.

C H A P. VII.

The History of Peter Abaelard, of his Writings, Errors and Condemnation.

The Life and Adven-
Abaelard.

THE famous Peter Abaelard has himself given us an account of his Life and Adventures, which are both Diverting and Singular. We have the Relation thereof in his first Letter written to one of his Friends, of which we now give you the Abstract. He was born in the Village call'd Le Palais, about three Leagues from the City of Nantes. His Father Berengarius, though a Man of Arms, was yet somewhat given to Study, and took care to give all his Children Learning. Abaelard who was the Youngest, and very much inclin'd to Letters, renounc'd the Profession of War, to give himself up wholly to the study of Philosophy. With this design he left his Native Country, and after he had frequented several Schools, came to Paris, where that Science was then in Vogue, and chose for his Master William of Champeaux Arch Deacon of Paris, the most famous Professor of that time. After he had liv'd for some time with him in good Repute, he incurr'd his Displeasure, because he undertook to refute his Opinions, and to dispute against him with so much Strength, that he sometimes seem'd to have the Advantage over him. The great Opinion which he had of his own Parts, made him though but young, very desirous of teaching others and of seeking out a convenient place where he might profess publicly. The Castle of Melum, which was then a Royal Seat, was pitch'd upon by him as very proper for his Purpose, because of its being near to Paris. He obtain'd a License to teach there publicly, in spite of the Opposition which William of Champeaux made, who did not like that Abaelard should teach so near Paris, for fear that the Reputation which he acquir'd would lessen his. In effect Abaelard had no sooner begun to teach Logick, but the Reputation of William began to sink, which inclin'd Abaelard to go and settle at Corbeil, that so being nearer Paris, the Disputes might be more frequent. Some time after, this Abaelard was constrain'd by a Sicknefs contracted by his great Application to Study to return to his own Country. During his Absence, William was made Regular Canon in the Monastery of St. Victor, that so (as was suppos'd) he might with greater ease obtain a Bishoppick, as happened accordingly, being within a short time after elected Bishop of Chalons. Whilst he stay'd at Paris he continued his Lectures in St. Victor; and Abaelard being returned to that City, had studied Rhetorick under him, and renewed the Disputes in Philosophy, which he had formerly with him, especially concerning that Universal à Parte rei, which he urg'd so far, that William was forc'd to change his Opinion, which acquir'd Abaelard so much Credit, that the Person who had succeeded William in teaching Logick at Paris, surrendred his place to him. William soon after outed both of them, so that Abaelard return'd to Melum, from whence he soon came back to Paris, and held his publick Lectures at St. Genevieve, where he had a great many Pupils, who were very frequently engag'd in Disputes with the Scholars of William. But when his Father became Monk, and his Mother Lucia was desirous likewise to live retiredly, Abaelard was forc'd to take a Journey into his own Countrey. At his return, he found that William was made Bishop of Chalons, and he went to that City to study Divinity under Anselm, Canon and Dean of the Church of Laon, who profess'd it with a great deal of Repute. Abaelard did not find that this Man's Learning answer'd the Fame thereof, and soon left off going to his Lectures. Several of the Scholars having ask'd him what he thought of reading the Holy Scriptures; he reply'd, that it was a very useful Study, but that he wonder'd that Men of Learning should not be satisfi'd with the Commentaries and Glosses of the Holy Fathers, without having recourse to other Masters. When they smil'd at the Proposal, he told them that he was ready to make it appear to them that it was Possible, and to give them an Experiment by explaining to them the most difficult Books of the Scriptures, with one single Commentator. They took him at his Word; and made choice of the Prophecy of Ezekiel. He began to explain it on the Morrow, and those who were present at his Explication, thought he had acquitted himself so well, that they brought a great many others to hear his ensuing Lectures. Anselm began to grow jealous of him, and mov'd thereto by Alberic of Rheims. and Lotulpus or Leutaldus of Novar, who had the repute of being his best Scholars. He forbid Abaelard to continue his Lectures, under a pretence, that if he should advance any erroneous Opinion, it might be imputed to him. Hereupon Abaelard return'd to Paris, where for some time he profess'd very quietly, continuing to expound the Holy Scriptures. The Repose which he enjoy'd, the Applauses which he receiv'd, and the Money which he got by this Profession, puff'd him up with Pride, and cast him into a debauch'd course of Life. But God punish'd him for both, by permitting him to be depriv'd of those parts which had serv'd as an instrument to his Lust, and to be constrain'd to burn with his own Hands that Book which he prided himself most upon; so that he became Chast by necessity, and humble by Force. We will give you now an account how this came about. There was at Paris a young Woman nam'd Heloissa, Niece to Fulbert, Canon of Paris, handsome and well shap'd, whom her Uncle who lov'd her tenderly, brought up to Learning. Abaelard who was her Tutor, immediately fell passionately in Love with her, and that he might the more easily enjoy her, he pray'd the

the young Woman's Uncle to take him to Board, under a pretence that he could bestow more time upon her, lodging in the same House, that besides he would do him a Kindness by easing him of the Trouble of House-Keeping, which was not suitable to a studious Man. The Uncle who neither distrusted the Virtue of his Niece, nor the prudence of Abaelard, who had hitherto liv'd very regularly, accepted freely of the Proposal, and intrusted him with Helloissa, whom Abaelard courted so much the more easily, because the pretence of study furnish'd him with an opportunity of being often alone with her. Sub occasione discipline (says Abaelard himself) amori penitus vacabamus, & secretos recessus, quos Amor optabat, studium Lektionis offerebat: Apertis itaq; Libris plura de Amore quam de Lektionis verba se ingerebant, plura erant oscula quam sententie. i. e. Under the pretence of Learning we had our fill of Love, and our study afforded those private Recesses which our Love required. We opened our Books indeed, but Love not the Lesson was the Burthen of our Discourse, and more Kisses were intermingled than Sentences read. The young Woman it seems was not so hard-hearted, but she answered his Flame, and in a short time the Business was known to every Body; besides the Uncle who was the last that found it out. As soon as he was inform'd of it, he turn'd Abaelard out of Doors; within a few days time after, Helloissa, whose Love was still the same, notwithstanding this Separation, writ word to Abaelard that she was with Child. He brought her off from her Uncle's House, and carried her to his own Countrey, disguis'd in the Habit of a Nun, where she was brought to Bed of a Boy, who was nam'd Astrolabe. The Uncle of Helloissa overwhelm'd with Grief at the loss of his Niece, would have reveng'd the Affront upon Abaelard's Person, had he not been afraid that she would have underwent the same Fate. Abaelard to pacifie him, went to wait upon him, and offered to marry his Niece, provided the Marriage were kept secret. The Uncle consented to it, and Abaelard went away immediately to fetch her and make her his Wife. She oppos'd the Resolution a long time, foreseeing that she should be the Ruine of the Fortune, and the Reputation of a Person whom she passionately lov'd. At last, yielding to the pressing Importunities of Abaelard, she return'd with him to Paris, where she was marry'd privately in a Church in the presence of her Uncle, and of several of their Friends. After they were marry'd they parted, and came together very seldom and very privately. The Uncle and his Friends immediately publish'd the Marriage abroad; but Helloissa who prefer'd the Honour and Interests of Abaelard to her own, and who fear'd that if the Marriage were discover'd, he would lose a Prebend which he had, and his Reputation too; swore that nothing could be falser. This gave her Uncle an occasion of abusing her, so that Abaelard resolv'd upon putting her into the Monastery of Argenteuil, where she had been formerly Educated, and making her take upon her the Habit of a Nun, but without the Veil. This made her Uncle and her Relations believe that he mock'd them, and design'd to abandon her; whereupon they resolv'd upon being reveng'd of him after a most barbarous manner, and in effect, enter'd the Chamber of L'Auberge, where he was; and punish'd him, by depriving him of those parts whereby he had injur'd them. It cannot be imagined what Confusion Abaelard was in, to see himself in that Condition. He owns that it was this more than Devotion, which induc'd him to embrace the Monastick Life, after he had perswaded Helloissa to become a Nun. They both made profession at the same time; Abaelard at St. Denys, and Helloissa at Argenteuil. The Disgrace which Abaelard fell into, did not hinder several Persons from waiting upon him at St. Denys, and intreating him to continue his Lectures to them; so that the Abbot and the Religious of St. Denys made use of this pretence, to send him to teach School in one of their Houses, that so they might be free from the Reproaches which he cast upon them for their Disorders. His Reputation drew thither so many Scholars from all parts, that the place where he was, was not capable of receiving them, nor the Country of providing for them. He taught them the Liberal Arts and Theology. This great course of Scholars, soon rais'd the Jealousie and Envy of other Masters against Abaelard, who to suspend him from all sorts of Professions, gave out that it was not proper for a Monk to teach the Liberal Arts, and that he could no longer expound the Holy Scriptures, since he had learn'd it without a Master.

The Treatise which he compos'd about the Unity of God and about the Trinity, gave his Adversaries an occasion of accusing him of Error. Alberic and Louiphus who taught at Rheims, The Count and who would after the Death of William of Champeaux and Anselm of Laon, succeed alone cil of So- to their Reputation, being jealous of Abaelard, excited Rodulphus Arch-Bishop of Rheims against i lions. him, who having sent for Conon Bishop of Palestrina the Pope's Legat in France, held a Council at Soissons, in the Year 1121. and cited Abaelard thither, ordering him to bring his Book along with him. He obey'd that Order, presented his Book to the Pope's Legat, and submitted it to his Judgment, assuring him, that if he had written any thing contrary to the Catholick Faith, he was ready to correct it, and to make Satisfaction. The Legat order'd him to put his Book into the hands of the Arch-Bishop of Rheims, who order'd it to be shewn to his two Adversaries, who read it over and over, to see if they could find any Error in it. Alberic met with a passage, wherein Abaelard deny'd that God could be said to generate himself. Abaelard justify'd it by the Authority of St. Augustin, which he had cited, and maintained to his Face, that if he should assert the contrary, he would fall into the same Herefie with those who believed that the Father was the Son of himself. Alberic was not satisfi'd with this Reply, but continu'd his Prosecutions against Abaelard. In the last Session of the Council, they put it to the Question, what Order they should make about his Book and about his Person. Geoffrey Bishop of Chartres said, that they ought to interrogate Abaelard, and give him liberty to make his Defence, but his Adversaries would not venture to stand it out with him. The Legat thought it advisable to refer this

The Life and Adventures of Abaelard. this Affair to a more numerous Council; and in the mean time to send Abaelard back to his Monastery, where he should be tryed. But his Adversaries made the Legat alter his mind, and persuaded him to condemn his Book, to order it to be burnt publicly, and to shut up the Author for ever in a Monastery; saying there was sufficient Grounds to condemn him for having undertaken to teach publicly, without having had a Mission from the Pope or the Church. When the Bishop of Chartres perceived that this Resolution was taken, he advertised Abaelard of it, and advised him to suffer it patiently, and the rather, because this Violence would be more prejudicial to his Enemies than to himself, assuring him that he should not be long confin'd, because the Legat who did all this against his Will, would quickly set him at liberty. Upon this Promise he came into the Council, cast his Book into the Fire with his own Hand, and there recited St. Athanasius's Creed as a Declaration of his Faith. Afterwards he was shut up in the Abby of St. Medard of Soissons. The Monks of that Monastery treated him very civilly, and did what they could to comfort him, but he was a great deal more concern'd at the Affront which had been then offer'd him, than at that Misfortune which happened to him formerly. However the Legat kept to the Promise which the Bishop of Chartres had made him, and within a few days after sent him back to his Monastery. He was as unacceptable to his fellow Monks, as he had formerly been, and they took occasion to give him fresh Disturbance, because he had asserted that St. Denys of France was not the Areopagite, founding his Assertion on what Bede says, that the Areopagite had been Bishop of Corinth, whereas 'tis believed that Denys of France had been Bishop of Athens. This Proposition did so far incense the Abbot and the rest of the Religious against him, that he not thinking himself secure in that Abby, made his escape by Night, and retired into the Territories of Thibaud, Count of Champagne, and dwelt in Provence in an Hospital belonging to the Monks of Troyes, the Prior whereof was one of his Friends. His Abbot would fain have had him out again, but dy'd within a short time after. Abaelard with much ado, obtain'd leave by the Interest of some great Lords to live in what place of Solitude he would, provided he would not enter into any other Monastery. After he had obtain'd this leave, he retir'd to a Solitude near Troyes, where he built a Chappel in a Field, which was given him by some private Persons of the place, by consent of the Bishop of Troyes. He was no sooner settled there, but he was follow'd by a great number of Scholars, who built little Cells round about his Lodge, so that one would have thought that they were rather Hermits than Scholars. They furnished him with all that he had occasion for, either for his Nourishment or Refreshment, and built him a Church which was dedicated to the Holy Trinity. Abaelard gave it the Title of Paraclete, in memory of the Consolation which he had received in that place. His Adversaries found fault at that Appellation, pretending that one could not dedicate a Church to the Holy Ghost alone. Upon this Abaelard observes, that the name of Paraclete might be very well applied to all the three Persons of the Trinity; and that if it were only the peculiar Title of the Holy Ghost, yet one might without any scruple dedicate a Temple to the Holy Ghost, though it might not be so Customary. His Enemies perceiving that they were not strong enough of themselves to ruin him, stirred up two great Persons against him, who were Men of the highest Esteem. One was the restorer of the ancient Life of the regular Canons, and the other of the Life of the Monks. ('Tis St. Norbert and St. Bernard which he here means.) These two Men declaim'd against both his Life and Morals, before the Ecclesiastical and Secular Powers. To escape this Storm, he accepted of the Abby of St. Gildors of Ruy's in the Diocess of Nantes in Bretagne, though the Monks thereof were very Barbarous and Cruel, with whom it was very difficult for him to converse. This happened at the same time when the Abbot of St. Denys took to himself the Abbey of Argenteuil, and the Nuns of that place being dispers'd, Abaelard gave to Helloissa, who was Prioress thereof, and to several other of the Religious who had follow'd her, the Church of the Paraclete and its Dependencies. This Donation was confirmed by the Bishop of Troyes, and by Pope Innocent II. and by Degrees, this Covent which was very poor at its first Rise, was plentifully endowed by the liberality of the Faithful. Abaelard went often thither to assist them in their Needs, which gave occasion to the Malicious of accusing him, of having still a Passion for Helloissa, and of attributing to the Motions of his fleshly Lufts, what he did out of a pure motive of Charity, or to avoid the ill treatment of his Monks, who perpetually sought for an Opportunity to get rid of him.

The Letters of Helloissa to Abaelard.

This Letter of Abaelard fell into the Hands of Helloissa, whereupon she sent him word, that having known his Hand-writing, she could not forbear to read it over with all the eagerness which the Passion she had for him could inspire into her. That it was but very reasonable since she had ruin'd him, that she might at least receive some Consolation by the reading of his Letters. That this however had very much afflicted her, by putting her in mind of the Miseries which had happened to him, and letting her know of the Danger wherein he was: That she conjur'd him to send her often word how he did, that so she might partake with him either in his Grief or his Joy: That since he had been pleas'd for the satisfaction of his Friend to send him an account of his Misfortunes, he lay under greater Obligations to write to her and her Religious, whom he ought to esteem not only as his Friends, but as Persons entirely at his Devotion; not as Companions, but as his own Daughters, who were beholden to him alone for the Monastery which they were in possession of: That it was he who first rendred that solitude Habitable, and was the Founder of that House: That it was his Duty likewise to bestow all his Cares upon it; and that having done so much for others, it was very reasonable he should be serviceable to them also. That he was farther oblig'd thereto, upon Consideration of the Relation she had to him, of the extream Love which she always had had for him, and the great loss which she had suffer'd by parting from him. Afterwards she expresses the Sentiments of her quondam Passion to him, so as not only to say that she never lov'd any thing in him beside his own Person, but also that the name of Concubine seemed more Eligible to her than that of Wife, because it would wound his Reputation less, and have made her a greater Sacrifice. She adds, that when the Emperor would have had her in Marriage, and bestow'd the whole Empire upon her; yet she chole to be Abaelard's Mistress, rather than Empress. (By this you may perceive the Violence of a Woman's Passion.) To this she subjoyns the Remembrance of several other reciprocal Testimonies of Love, which they had given each other; and afterwards she upbraids him for that, though in Obedience to him she was made a Nun; yet that he had so far slighted or rather forgot her, that she had received no Refreshment by his Visits, nor Comfort by his Letters. Is it (says she) because the Bond which tyed you to me was rather the Heat of Lust than the Force of Love? She avows, that it was not out of Devotion, but in Obedience to her Husband's Commands, that she had embrac'd the Monastick Life; that she could not expect any Reward from the Lord for it, for whose Sake she had not done it: That she had follow'd, or rather preceeded her Husband, and that one of those things which troubled her most was, that he had engag'd her to dedicate herself to God, before he had resolv'd upon it himself, as if he had some distrust of her Fidelity. She assures him, that even at present, she had him still in her Mind, and lov'd him still. She intreats him to consider what a piece of Ingratitude it would be in him to refuse to visit her, and comfort her with his Letters, since that would be a means of her serving God with the less Degradation. And lastly, that since he had formerly writ so many Love Letters to excite a dishonourable Passion in her, it was very reasonable that he should write some to her now to incline her to God.

Abaelard return'd an Answer, That it was not out of Negligence that he had deferr'd writing to her, but because he had so much Confidence in her Piety and Learning, as to think that she stood in no need of his Advice: That if she thought that she wanted it, she might inform him of the Points wherein she desir'd his Instruction, and that he would satisfy her therein. He thanks her for being so kind as to participate in his Afflictions, and recommends himself to her Prayers, and the Prayers of her Fraternity. From this he takes an occasion to shew how grateful the Prayers of Holy Virgins are to God. In particular he takes notice to her of a Form of Prayers which he desired, that they would say for him at the Close of the Canonical Hours; and tells her, that after his Death, he would have his Body be brought to their Monastery to be there interr'd, that they might pray to God for the quiet of his Soul.

This Letter very sensibly affected Heloïssa, because Abaelard therein speaks of his Death, as if near at Hand. She had so much Affection for him, that she could not bear this thought, without being very much disturbed at it. She declares those thoughts to him in a very patherical manner in the Letter, which she sent back to him, wherein she could not forbear reflecting upon the Misfortune, which had happened to Abaelard through her means. She desir'd that she might undergo a Penance worthy of her Fault, and owns that she is still so weak, as not to efface out of her Memory the remembrance of past Pleasures, but that they continually present themselves to her Mind, which gives her great cause of Humiliation, and of rejecting the Praises which he had bestow'd upon her.

Abaelard endeavour'd to comfort her by excusing himself of the Reproaches which she had cast upon him in that Letter, which he reduced to four Heads. The first was about the Complaint which he made of his having nam'd her first in the Inscription of this Letter. The Second about the Reproach which he had cast upon him, of having increased her Grief, rather than afforded her any Consolation. The Third about the Reflections which she had made upon their past Misfortunes. And the last about her refusal of the Praises which he had given her. As to the first Head, he satisfy'd her by saying, that since she was become the Spouse of Jesus Christ, she was according to St. Jerom's Phrase his Mistress, and that upon that account, he had reason to name her first. From thence he took an occasion to give her some Instructions about the Virtues requisite for the Spouse of Jesus Christ. Upon the Second Head, he says that he had not mention'd any thing of his Death, or the Danger wherein he was in his Letter, if she had not conjur'd him to do it. Upon the third Head, he approves of her rejecting all Praises, provided it were sincere, and if she did not condemn them out of a principle of Pride. As to the Fourth Head, he intreats her to make no farther Complaints of a Misfortune which he really deserv'd, as due to his Sins, whereof he was thoroughly sensible. He advises her rather to give God Thanks for the favour he had shewn to both of them, by bringing them out of a disorderly Course of Life, to lead a more regular one. He look'd upon that Pain which had been inflict'd on him as very light, in Comparison of the Crimes which he had committed, and thought himself very happy in being deliver'd from that which had been the cause of his Sin. He concludes with a Prayer which the Religious of the Nunnery of Paraclete ought to say for him and Heloïssa.

In the next Letter Heloïssa in Obedience to the Order which Abaelard had given her, made no more mention of their Misfortunes, but intreated him on behalf of her self and her Religious, in the first place to inform them of the Original of their Order, and of the Authority thereof. In the Second place, to compose a particular Rule, and such as might be proper for them, which had not as yet been done, the Monks and Nuns professing the same Rule of St. Benedict, wherein were a great many things which were only applicable to Men; as for instance, that which is said about Habits, Functions, the Abbot, the entertaining of Strangers, Manufactures, and other practises which their Sex was not capable of. That if according to the Intention of St. Benedict, the Rule ought ought to be moderated in favour of the Weak, it was very reasonable to do so in favour of the Virgins; that the external Exercises which are such as they were the least capable of, were likewise the least necessary. For this Reason he exhorts Abaelard to draw up a Discretionary Rule for them, which might be suited to their Weakness, particularly with relation to the Fasts and Service of the Church, it being very reasonable that he who under God was the Founder of their Monastery, should be likewise the Institutor of their Rule.

Abaelard's Reply to Heloissa. Abaelard answers the first Question of Heloissa in the Seventh Letter, wherein he pretends that the Monastical Orders as well of Men as of Women, drew its Original from the manner of Jesus Christ's living here on Earth. That there were several Examples of this in the Old Law: That the Women who attended our Saviour and the Blessed Virgin, who liv'd in common with the Apostles; the Virgins and Widows of the Primitive Church, led a Religious Life. Afterwards he enlarges himself on the Praises of the Sex, and particularly on those of Virgins, of whom he makes a learned Encomium throughout the whole Letter.

He satisfied Heloissa in her second Demand, by sending to her a full instruction about Continen-cence, voluntary Poverty, Silence and Solitude, to which are annex'd particular Constitutions for the Abbess, and for the other Officers of the Covent, and about the Order which they ought to observe in the Divine Service, in Meats, in Habits, and in reading of the Holy Scriptures, to which he advises them above all things. This Rule is full of very useful Instructions, and of fine Passages out of Scripture, and the Writings of the Fathers apply'd very much to the purpose. There is to be found in the Manuscript of the Abbey of Paraclete another Collection of particular Rules which are attributed to Heloissa.

The Letters of Abaelard. Fulens Prior of Deuil bore likewise a share in the Misfortune which happened to Abaelard, and wrote him a Consolatory Letter upon that Subject, wherein he advises him to stay in his Monastery, and not to undertake a Journey to Rome to demand Justice of the Canon, who had been the Cause of his being so abus'd. This is the first Letter of the second Collection which relate to Abaelard.

The Second is a Memoir of Abaelard, directed to Adam, Abbot of St. Denys, and to the Monks of that Monastery, and to prove against the Testimony of Bede, that Denys the Areopagite was not Bishop of Corinth, but Bishop of Athens.

In the Third directed to a Regular Canon, who despis'd the Monks and extoll'd the Regular Clerks, and maintained that the Monastical Order was inferiour to the Clerical; Abaelard takes the Monks part, and maintains that the Monastical Order was not in the least inferiour to that of the Regular Canons, whether one regard the Figure which they make among Men, or that which Religion gives them in the sight of God. The Reasons which he alledges for this were, that we see every day Clerks who embrac'd the Monastical Life, and that after they had done so, were not permitted to re-enter into the Clerical Order. That the Monks who were made choice of to execute the Clerical Functions, never quit their Habit: That they often made choice of Monks to make them Bishops, whereas they never chose Clerks to preside over Monasteries: That in the Litanies and Prayers of the Church, the suffrages of the Monks were implor'd: That the Monks are advanc'd to Holy Orders, and even to Priesthood it self: That St. Jerom prefers the Monastical State to that of Clerks, as being more perfect: That St. John Baptist quitted the Priesthood to lead a solitary Life: That the Monks are in less danger of their Salvation, than the Clerks who are oblig'd to converse so much with the World: That the Monks embrace the Contemplative Life which our Saviour prefer'd before the Active Life: That the Regular Canons whose Institution was but new, imitate the Monks in living in Common in Cloysters: That lastly, the Life of Monks is more painful and more Austere than that of the Clerks.

The fourth Letter is against those who condemn the use of Logick. Abaelard compares them to the Fox in the Fable, who slighted the Fruit at which he could not get. He says, that those Doctors do in the same manner despise Logick, because they have not a Genius to comprehend it. He makes it appear, that the Holy Fathers, and particularly St. Augustine have commended this Art, and thought it necessary for the right Explication of the Holy Scriptures. He owns that one ought to avoid the love of Disputing, and the desire of deceiving others by Sophisms; but he would have Men have an insight both into Logick and Sophistry, to discern good Argumentations from false Ones. He maintains, that without Logick 'tis very difficult to refute Hereticks.

The Fifth is writ to St. Bernard, about the Intelligence which Abaelard had received from Heloissa Abbess of Paraclete, that that Saint coming to that Monastery, had observed them to repeat the Lord's-Prayer quite different from what was done in other Churches, and looked upon it as a Novelty, which he thought Abaelard had introduc'd. All the difference consisted in that they said our Super-substantial Bread, instead of our Daily Bread. Abaelard observes, that the first Phrase being in the Text of St. Matthew, who has given us the Lord's-Prayer more entire and compleat than Saint Luke, and whose Phrases are follow'd except in this; it seem'd more reasonable to change nothing in the Text, and to make use of the Phrase which St. Matthew has used, than to insert into St. Matthew's Text a Phrase taken out of St. Luke's Gospel. That therefore one ought not to accuse those of a Novelty, who in repeating the Lord's-Prayer, say, Give us our Super-substantial Bread, instead of our Daily Bread, since they are the very Words used by St. Matthew, whose Form was follow'd. That however he did not blame the contrary Usage; but that he did not believe this Usage was to be prefer'd to the Truth, and the rather, because the Greek Church had retain'd the proper Terms of St. Matthew's Gospel. That St. Bernard had the least reason of any Man to find fault with this Alteration, since there were in his Order a great many Novelities contrary to the Ancient Customs and Usages of the Monks and Clerks, even in the Divine Service; such as for instance the Singing of New Hymns, the Singing of the same Hymn on different Festivals; the not repeating the Suffrages which were elsewhere said after the Lord's Prayer; the omitting the Commemoration of the Virgin and of the Saints at the End of the Office; the having excluded almost entirely the Usage of Processions; the Singing Allelujab even to Quinquagesima-Sunday; the not reciting the Apostles Creed at Prime and the Vespers, and the Singing of the Invitatory, the Hymn and the Gloria Patri the last three days in the holy Week. Tho' those Practices were contrary to the common Usage of the Church, yet Saint Bernard did not think himself oblig'd to leave them, because he esteem'd them more reasonable and more Conformable to the Rule. From hence Abaelard concludes, that upon a stronger Reason, one could not well disapprove the Alteration which he had made in the Lord's Prayer, tho' it might seem a Novelty; and the Rather because the Novelities which are prohibited are not those of Expressions, but those of Opinions, since the Church has invented new Phrases to explain our Mysteries: That Lastly there be a World of different Customs in the Church with respect to Ceremonies; That in Rome no Church beside the Lateran observes the ancient Usage of the holy See: That in Milan only the Cathedral Church observes its ancient Rites: That the Church of Lions is the only Church which has retain'd its Ancient Office; and that the Diversity of Ceremonies has likewise its Advantages. Lastly he concludes by saying that every one might abound in his own Sense, and repeat the Lord's Prayer in the way which he should think most proper: That he does not intend to persuade others to imitate him therein: That he left those who would at their Liberty to change the Words of Jesus Christ, but for his part he would endeavour all he could to keep to the proper Terms of Jesus Christ, as well as to his Words.

The sixth Letter is an Exhortation to the Religious of Paraclete to study that they might be capable of Reading and understanding the Holy Scriptures: It hardly consists of any thing else but passages out of Saint Jerome upon that Subject. He congratulates their Happiness in having such a Learned Abbe's as was able to teach them Latin, Greek, and Hebrew; the Languages which were necessary for their rightly understanding of the Scriptures. He recommends to them the having recourse to the Original Text which is the foundation of all Versions, and to study Hebrew and Greek, the Study whereof he complains was very much neglected in his Time. He wishes that those Nuns would recover that Learning, which the Men had suffer'd to be lost. And takes notice that they might apply themselves to it the more easily, because they were less Capable of working with their Hands than Men, and were the more oblig'd to it by the Quietness and Sedateness of their Lives, and because the Weakness of their Sex render'd them more liable to temptations, which they might divert by being thus employ'd.

The Seventh is a Panegyrick on Saint Stephen dedicated to the Nuns of Paraclete.

From the year 1121. wherein Abaelard was forc'd in the Council of Soissons to cast his Book The Charge of Theology into the Fire, he had met with no disturbance about his Doctrine, tho' he had brought still continu'd to write and teach the same things as before. The first who renew'd the Charge against him was William Abbot of Saint Thierry, who having read two Books of Abaelard's Theology compos'd by Peter Abaelard, and therein found such Propositions as put him to some disturbance, and which he thought to be contrary to sound Doctrine, sent an account of them to Geoffrey Bishop of Chartres and to Saint Bernard Abbot of Clairvaux; exhorting them to declare themselves against those Novelities and to get them to be condemn'd. His Letter is the three hundred and twenty sixth among the Letters of Saint Bernard. He therein says that he is very much afraid to speak his mind at a time wherein those whose duty it was to do it held their Peace; but that he could not be silent when he saw the Faith of the Church corrupted by Very Dangerous Errors, and the rather because the Contest was about the Faith which related to the Trinity, the Person of our Mediator, the Holy Ghost, the Grace of Jesus Christ, and the Sacrament of our Redemption; and because the New Notions which Peter Abaelard taught and writ, were spread through the World, and taught and Maintain'd publicly, and had (as 'tis said) some repute even in the Court of Rome. He exhorts Geoffrey and Saint Bernard to undertake the Defence of the Faith, and tells them that he apply'd himself more particularly to them, because Abaelard fear'd them more than all the World beside. He afterwards relates thirteen Propositions which he said he had taken out of the Writings of Abaelard: viz. (1.) That the defin'd Faith to be the Idea of things not seen. (2.) That he asserts that the Names of Father, Son and Holy Ghost, are not properly applicable to God. But that 'tis only a Description of the Plenitude of the Sovereign Good. (3.) That the Father is a full Power, the Son a Certain Power, and the holy Ghost no Power at all. (4.) That the Holy Ghost does not partake of the Substance of the Father and the Son, in the same manner as the Son does of the Substance of the Father. (5.) That the Holy Ghost is Anima mundi, i. e. the Soul of the World. (6.) That one may do either Good or Evil by one's own free Will without the Influence and Assistance of the Grace of God. (7.) That Jesus Christ was not made man, and did not suffer to deliver us from the Bondage of the Devil. (8.) That Christ as God-Man is not one of the three persons of the Trinity. (9.) That in the Sacrament of the Altar, the form of the Substance of Bread and Wine which was there before the Consecration, remains the same afterwards. (10.) That he maintains that the Suggestions of the Devil are insus'd into Man by Physical Causes. (11.) That we do not contract the Guilt, but the punishment only only of Original Sin. (12.) That there is no Sin, unless in the Consent we give to Sin, and in the Contemning of God. (13.) That there is no sin of Concupiscence, Lust or Ignorance. These are the Articles which William Abbot of Thierry says that he drew out of the Book of Abaelard's Divinity. He adds that he heard say that he had written likewise several other Opuscula, whereof one was Intituled the Yea and the No; another, Know thy self, and several others, the Doctrine of which he was afraid was as Monstrous as the Titles were extraordinary and singular. After this Letter William writes a Treatise levell'd expressly against those Errors, which is to be met with in the Library of Cisteaux, and to which this Letter serves as a Preface.

Saint Bernard return'd William this Answer, that he perceiv'd that the Zeal which he express'd against the Errors of Abaelard was reasonable and necessary, and that the Book which he had compos'd to refute him seem'd very useful, tho' he had not as yet time but only to read it cursorily, and not exactly; but that since this was a business of great Consequence, he desir'd to have a Conference with him about it, which yet he thought could not be before Easter, for fear of interrupting his Devotions in the Season of Lent. That besides he would not have been so long silent, if he had had a perfect Knowledge of the Errors of Abaelard.

When he was inform'd of them and had examin'd Abaelard's Book himself, he very charitably admonish'd him to retract his Errors and to correct his Books, and advis'd his Disciples to read them no more. This Admonition serv'd only to exasperate Abaelard, who made loud complaints against Saint Bernard: So that this Saint perceiving that the private Admonition which he had given him prov'd ineffectual, he thought it his Duty to tell it the Church, and wrote against him to Innocent II. and to several Prelates of the Court of Rome, accusing him of making Degrees in the Trinity with Arius, of preferring Free-Will before Grace with Pelagius, of dividing Jesus Christ with Nestorius, by excluding him out of the Number of the persons of the Trinity. He exhorts them warmly to oppose those Errors and Condemn them. This is the Subject matter of the hundred and Eightieth, the three hundred and thirtieth, the three Hundred and thirty first, thirty second, thirty third, thirty fourth, thirty fifth, and thirty sixth Letters of Saint Bernard.

Abaelard seeing himself thus accus'd, made his Application to Henry Arch-Bishop of Sens, and intreated him that he would summons Saint Bernard to the Council which was to be held, that so he might enter into dispute with him about the Principal Errors which he imputed to him. The Arch-Bishop of Sens wrote to Saint Bernard to come on the day appointed on the Octave of Pentecost in the year 1140 to the Synod, that he might enter into a Conference with Abaelard in presence of the Bishops. Saint Bernard made some Scruple at first of coming thither, whether he thought (as he said) that he was too strong for him in Disputes, or whether he thought that the truths of the Christian Faith ought not to be expos'd to the Argumentation of Humane Reasonings. He at first answer'd that the Writings of Abaelard were sufficient to convince him, and that it was not his Business, but the Bishops to whom of right did belong the Determination of the Doctrines of Faith. Abaelard made an Advantage of this Refusal, and spread abroad that he would be at Sens on the day appointed to answer Saint Bernard. Upon this, Saint Bernard's Friends fearing that his Absence would prove an Offence to the People, and create a Confidence in his Adversary, and confirm his Error, advis'd him to go to the Council of Sens. He advertises the Bishops and his Friends of it in a Circular Letter, which is his hundred and Eighty seventh, and exhorted them to undertake the Defence of a Cause which was more properly theirs than his own.

The Bishops met at Sens on the Octave of Whitsontide, when the Relicks were to be shown in the Cathedral Church of that City. All the Bishops of the Province of Sens met there, except the Bishops of Nevers and Paris, viz: Geofrey of Chartres Legate of the holy See, Elias of Orleans, Hugh of Auxerre, Hatto of Troyes, Manasses of Meaux. Sampson Arch-Bishop of Rheims was likewise there with three of his Suffragans, viz: Josselin Bishop of Soissons, Geofrey of Chalons, and Aloisius of Arras; a great many Abbots, Deans and persons of Learning and Piety were likewise there. The King himself (Lewis the Young) was likewise present with William Count of Nevers. The Council being ser, Saint Bernard produc'd there Peter Abaelard's Book, recited the Erroneous or Absurd Propositions which he had extracted thence, and urg'd Peter Abaelard either to disown that he had writ them, or if he would acknowledge them to be his, to prove or retract them. Peter Abaelard had recourse to shifts, and would not answer expressly, tho' he had Liberty given him to do it, had very favourable Judges, and was in a place where he need not to fear any thing: But whether he fear'd an Insurrection of the People, if Orto of Frisingen's Word be to be taken in the Case, or whether he thought he should have greater Advantage at Rome, where were Cardinals and Prelats who thought it an honor to be his Disciples, he appeal'd to the Pope, and afterwards withdrew from the Assembly attended with those of his Party. Tho' the Bishops were of Opinion that this Appeal was not Regular, because he appeal'd to Judges of his own Choosing; yet out of Respect to the holy See, they would not pronounce any sentence against his person; but they condemn'd his Opinions after they had been read over several times and refuted Publickly by Saint Bernard. This Sentence being pass'd, the Arch-Bishop of Sens and his Suffragans, and the Arch-Bishop of Rheims with his three Suffragans who were at the Synod wrote severally to Pope Innocent II. to desire him to confirm the Sentence which they had pass'd against the Errors of Abaelard and to intreat him to prevent his teaching any Longer, and his having any Countenance at the Court of Rome. Their Letters are the hundred and Ninety first, and and the three hundred and thirty seventh among the Letters of Saint Bernard, who doubtless compos'd them himself. He wrote likewise in his own Name to the Pope the hundred and Eighty Ninth Letter wherein he earnestly exhorts him to proscribe the Errors of Abaelard, and to hinder him from having any Countenance in the Court of Rome. He likewise sent him the Heads which he had found fault with in Abaelard's Book, with an Ample Refutation of his Errors. This is the hundred and Ninetieth, or Ninty first Opuscul. Lastly to prevent Abaelard from making use of that Credit which he had at Rome in his favour, he wrote to three Cardinals his Friends, to do what they could, that Abaelard might not succeed in his Designs. This is the Subject Matter of the hundred and second, the hundred and third and three hundredth and thirty Eighth Letters.

The Pope return'd Answer to the Prelates of the Council of Sens, and to Saint Bernard, that he commended the Zeal which they had express'd against the Errors of Abaelard: That after he had advis'd with the Bishops and Cardinals he had condemn'd the Heads which they had sent him, and all the Errors of Peter Abaelard with the Author of them, on whom he impos'd a perpetual silence as on a Heretick, and that he had adjudg'd that all the Followers and Defenders of his Errors ought to be Excommunicated. This Letter which is the hundred and Ninty fourth among Saint Bernard's bears date July the 16th in the Year 1140. In an Order of the same or the foregoing day, directed to the same Bishops and Saint Bernard, he joyns Peter Abaelard to Arnulphus of Bresse, and orders the Bishops to imprison them, and to burn their Books where-ever they found them.

The Confirmation of the Sentence pass'd by the Council of Sens by the Pope.

Abaelard to justify himself compos'd an Apology, or rather a Confession of Faith, wherein after Abaelard's Apology. he had taken Notice, that it was a hard matter, when one writ, to avoid reproach; he protests in the presence of God, that he is not at all sensible of being guilty of those things whereof they accus'd him; and that if he were satisfied of his having advanc'd any Error, he was resolv'd to maintain it no longer: That it might happen that by carelessness he might have writ what he ought not to have writ; but that he calls God to Witness, that as to those Points whereof he was accus'd he had advanc'd nothing out of an ill Design, or Pride; That he always spoke in Publick, and never conceal'd his Writings: That if in that great Number of Lectures which he had held, he had fallen into any extravagancies, he would never be stiff in the Maintenance of them, but would be always ready to give satisfaction by Correcting or blotting out what he might have advanc'd improperly: But that as it was his Duty to correct the faults which he had committed, he was likewise oblig'd to refute those Accusations of Error which had been falsely laid to his Charge, because as Saint Augustine says, he who is negligent of his Reputation is an Enemy to himself, and silence is a kind of Confession: That 'tis for this Reason that he Answers those Heads which are publish'd against him, to let all the Faithful know that he is a true Son of the Church; that he receiv'd whatever it receiv'd; that he rejected whatever it rejected, and that he always continu'd in the Union of the Church, tho' he were not equal to others in the sanctity of his Life. He thereupon in this Apology rejects the Errors whereof he was accus'd, and professes the Contrary Truths, by declaring (1.) That he abhorr'd the Proposition which had been maliciously imputed to him, That the Father had a perfect Power, that the Son had only a Certain Power, and that the holy Ghost had no Power at all; and he professes that he believes that the Son and Holy Ghost are of the same Substance with the Father, and that they have the same Power, and the same Will, and pretends that it was either out of Malice or Ignorance that they had accus'd him of having said that the Holy Ghost was not of the same Substance with the Father. (2.) That he professes to believe that the Only Son of God was made man to deliver us from the Slavery of Sin and from the Bondage of the Devil, and to open an Entrance to us to Heaven by his Death. (3.) That Jesus Christ is the true and only Son of God, Born of the Substance of the Father before all Worlds; and that the holy Ghost is the third person of the Trinity who proceeded from the Father and the Son. (4.) That the Grace of God is so necessary to all men, that neither Nature, nor Free-will are sufficient to Salvation, because Grace Prevents us that we may Will, follows that we may do what we Will, and accompanies us that we may persevere. (5.) That God cannot do any thing but what is agreeable to his Nature for him to do, and that he has indeed Power of doing a great many things which he will never do. (6.) That there are sins of Ignorance, especially when it proceeds from an Omission of having learn'd what we are oblig'd to know. (7.) That God often hinders Evils, either by preventing the Evil Wills of Wicked men, or by changing them. (8.) That we have All contracted the Guilt and Punishment of Adam's Sin, which has been the Cause and Original of all our Sins. (9.) That those who crucified Jesus Christ committed a notorious sin by nailing him to the Cross. (10.) That the Perfection of Charity was in Jesus Christ. (11.) That the Power of Binding or Unbinding was granted to the Apostles and their Successors, and that all Bishops be they Worthy or Unworthy have that Power, so long as the Church acknowledges them as Bishops. (12.) That all those who are equal in Charity, are equal likewise in Perfection and Merit. (13.) That the Father is as Wise as the Son, and the Son as Beneficent as the holy Ghost, because the Glory of the three persons of the Trinity is coequal. (14.) That one cannot Attribute to the Father the last Judgment or Advent. (15.) That the Soul of Jesus Christ did not only descend into Hell in Power, but likewise really and substantially. (16.) That he had not maintain'd, that neither Action, nor the Will, nor Lust, nor Pleasure were sins, and that we ought not to pray for the quenching of our Lusts. Lastly he asserts that they did him wrong in attributing a Book of Sentences to him which he had never compos'd; and conjures all the Faithful not to injure his Innocence, which the Truth shelters from all the faults ascribed to him, and the rather because Charity requires us to put the best Sense on Doubtful matters.

*The Rec-
Cluny and his Death.* After he had publish'd this Apology, he set out on his Journey towards Rome; but being arriv'd at Cluny, he was detain'd there by Peter the Venerable, Abbot of Cluny. Whilst he was there, the Abbot of Cîteaux coming thither likewise, endeavour'd to bring him to make his Peace with Saint Bernard. Peter the Venerable urg'd the same thing to him also, perswaded him to go and Wait upon him with the Abbot of Cîteaux, and advis'd him that in case he had said or writ any thing which might be Offensive to the Ears of the Catholicks, to advance no such thing for the future, and to strike it out of his Books. He took his Advice, waited upon Saint Bernard, and was reconcil'd to him by the Mediation of the Abbot of Cîteaux. He return'd afterwards to Cluny, where he resolv'd to spend the rest of his Days in Repose free from the Hurry and fatigue of the Schools. Peter the Venerable thought himself oblig'd to allow this favour to his Age, to his Weakness and to his Piety; not questioning withall but that his Learning would be very advantageous for the Instruction of his Monks. He wrote about it to Pope Innocent and pray'd him to grant that Abelard might spend the remainder of his Life with them. 'Tis to be believed that the Pope granted him that favour; for Abelard resided in that Community till he dy'd, and behav'd himself with a great deal of Piety and Humility for two Years together. Towards the End of his Life he found himself very much oppress'd with Infirmities, and was sent to the Monastery of Saint Marcellus of Chalons upon the Seyne, as being a more healthful and pleasant place, where he dy'd in the year 1142. in the sixty third year of his Age. Peter the Venerable acquainted Heloïssa of his Death by a Letter, wherein he gives her an Encomium of his manner of Living ever since he had retreated to their Society, annexes thereto an Epitaph in his praise, and sent his Body to the Abbey of Paraclete to be there interr'd. He afterwards went himself to visit that Abbey, where he said Mass, made an Exhortation to the Religious in the Chapter house, gave them the Eucharist, and promis'd Heloïssa to put up Prayers for God for her in the Society of Cluny for thirty days together after her Death. She thank'd him for all those Favours in a Letter which she sent to him, and at the same time intreats him to send her Abelard's Absolution, and to procure a Prebend for her Son Astrolabe. Peter the Venerable sent her this Absolution, and promis'd her to do his best for the procuring a Prebend for her Son, tho' the Bishops were very Scrupulous in granting those Sort of Benefices.

of Abelard.*

The Works of Abelard which are now extant are the Letters which we have mention'd in the Course of his History, Expositions of the Lords Prayer, of the Apostles Creed, and of the Creed of Saint Athanasius, A Reply to the Questions or Problems propos'd by Heloïssa, a Book about Heresies, a Commentary on the Epistle to the Romans divided into five Books, thirty two Sermons on the Festivals of the year, an Introduction into Theology divided into three Books, the last of which is imperfect. Those which are lost, or have not as yet been printed, are his Logick, of which he makes mention in his first Letter and in the third Book of his Theology; his Notes upon Ezekiel, his Morals intituled Noſce Teipsum, Know thy self; another Book intituled; Sic & Non, Yea and No, which is to be met with in Manuscript in the Library of Saint Germain of Paris, so intituld, because 'tis a Collection of such Sentences out of holy Writ, as are in appearance contrary to each other, and a Treatise of the Creation of the World, dedicated to Heloïssa, which is likewise a Manuscript in the same Library.

In abstracting his Works we will begin with his Introduction into Theology; which is the Book which has made so great a Noise in the World, it being that which Contains the Principles of his Doctrine, and the Heads upon which he was reprehended and condemn'd.

He begins the First Book with the Explication of Faith, Hope and Charity; he says that there are three things necessary to Salvation, Faith, Charity, and the Sacrament; for he believes that Hope is comprehended in Faith, as a Species in its Genus. He defines Faith to be the Estimation or Idea of Invisible things; and Hope the Expectation of some Good, Faith, according to him, has Respect to Good and Evil, both present and future; whereas Hope has only regard to future Good. He defines Charity to be an honourable Love directed to its due End or Object; and Lust on the Contrary to be a shameful and dishonourable Love. Love in General is that Good Will and Affection which one has for another, whereby one wisheth to another some Good upon the Sole Esteem which he has for him: Charity is the Love of God; Lust or Concupiscence is the Love of the World: God is the Ultimate End or Object of the former, Man is the Ultimate End or Object of the Latter. He observes that Man is the Cause, but ought not to be the End of his Actions, and that what he does for himself ought to have a Respect to God. As for the Sacrament he defin'd it to be an outward and Visible Sign of the Invisible Grace of God: Thus for instance (says he) when a man is baptiz'd the outward washing of the Body which we behold, is the sign of the Inward Washing of the Soul. Faith is the Foundation of other Virtues, because we only hope for what we believe: For which reason 'tis defin'd by the Apostle Heb. 11. 1. to be the Substance, i. e. the Foundation and Origin of things hop'd for; things Invisible or future are properly the Object of Faith, tho' sometimes we apply this Term to things which are seen. Among the things which may be believ'd, there be some which 'tis no matter whether they be believ'd or no; such as whether it please God it should or should not rain to-morrow: But when one speaks of Faith, one means only that which relates to such things which we are oblig'd to believe under the Pain of Damnation; and which belong to the Catholick or Universal Faith, the which is so necessary that without it no man can be sav'd. This Faith has for its Object the Nature of God and his Benefits shewn to mankind. In the first place 'tis requisite to pretend of that which relates to the Nature of God, and to explain how there is but one God and three persons. The Works of Abaelard. After he had Establish'd the Unity, Simplicity, and Immutability of God, he treats of the Trinity of Persons. He says that one of the Divine Persons is not the Other; That the Father, for Instance, is not the Son, nor the Son the holy Ghost, because they are of the same nature and distinguish'd only personally; That the Property of God the Father is not to be begotten: That of the Son, to be begotten, but not made nor Created; That of the holy Ghost, to proceed from the Father and the Son, but not made nor Created. The Names of the three persons comprehend the Essence which is supremely or infinitely perfect. The Power of God is denoted by the Name of Father, the Wisdom by that of the Logos or the Son, and the Love of God towards men by that of the Holy Ghost, the three things which make up the Supreme Good. The Distinction of these three persons serves to persuade men, to render to God the Worship and Adoration which they owe to him; for two things inspire into us Respect, viz. Fear and Love. The Power and Wisdom of God make us to fear him, because we know that he is our Judge; that he can punish us, and that nothing is hid from his Eyes; and his Goodness makes us to love him, because 'tis but just and reasonable to love him who does us so much Good. This likewise serves to render the Works of God the more admirable; since he can do whatsoever he pleases; that he knows how to preserve what he has made, and Wills that every thing should be made and subsist in its Order. He takes notice that yet we ought not to believe that those Attributes do so agree to each of the Divine Persons, but that they may be common to them all; so that we are not to believe that the Father is only Powerful, the Son Only Wise, and the holy Ghost only Merciful; but on the Contrary that these three persons have the same Power, Wisdom and Mercy: That these three Properties are only attributed to the three Divine Persons in an Especial Manner, as their particular Operations are attributed to them, tho' all the Divine Operations which relate to the Creatures, are Common to all the three Persons, namely the Creation to the Father, the Incarnation to the Son, and the Regeneration to the holy Ghost. Afterwards he proves the Mystery of the Trinity by several passages out of the Old Testament, and by the Testimonies of the heathen Philosophers of whom he quotes a great many.

He foresaw that these Citations out of the Heathen Philosophers concerning the Mystery of the Trinity would seem extraordinary, and displease a great many People, therefore he makes use of part of the Second Book to justify himself in this particular. (1.) By the Example and Testimonies of Saint Jerom and the other Fathers. (2.) By demonstrating that Logick and the other Sciences are not useless to Religion, provided a right use be made of them. (3.) By showing that 'tis usefull to explain Mysteries as well as one can, by Instances and Comparisons, and to demonstrate that they are not contrary to Reason, especially when they were to treat with Jews, Heathens, and Hereticks. (4.) By refuting those who maintain'd that one ought not to make use of Reason, but only Authority to prove the Mysteries of Faith. (5.) By maintaining that one might have some Knowledge of Mysteries, and that as we have Terms whereby to explain them, 'tis requisite likewise that we have Ideas to answer those Terms. (6.) Because without taking any Notice of Jews and Pagans, there are likewise some Hereticks or Persons erroneous about our Mysteries; viz. a certain Laick nam'd Tacheline in Flanders, who caused himself to be stil'd by the People the Son of God; and Peter of Bruis in Provence, who had so far subverted the Order and Discipline of the Church, as to oblige a great many People to be rebaptiz'd, and taught that one ought not to Celebrate the Sacrament of the Altar any longer, nor make use of the Cross; That it was not requisite any longer to pass by in silence the Publick Professors who taught Errors contrary to the Catholick Faith and Sound Doctrine, among whom he opposes four, one in France, another in Burgundy, a third in Angers, and a Fourth in Bourges. He gives a particular account of their Errors, which it may not be amiss to insert here. "The first (says he) asserts that several of those who liv'd before the Coming of Jesus Christ were 'sav'd without having believ'd his future Coming; That our Saviour proceeded out of the Virgins Womb after the same manner as Other Men, and that God begat himself. The second teaches that the three Properties which distinguish the three Divine Persons, are three Distinct Essences of the same Person, and of the Divine Nature: That the Body of our Saviour did not increase, but was of the same Bigness in the Virgins Womb and in the Manger, as it was upon the Cross. That the Marriages of Monks or Nuns are Valid, and that one ought not to divorce them, but only to injoy them Penance. The third not only maintains that the Attributes of the Divine Persons are things distinct from the Godhead, but likewise that all the other Attributes, such as Justice, Mercy, &c. are Qualities and things distinct from God. The fourth has been so Extravagant, as to assert that since things may happen otherwise than God forelaw they would, 'tis possible for him to be deceiv'd."

From this Digression he returns to his Subject, and treats of the Divine Nature. He says that God is not an Accident, nor properly a Substance, if you take that word to signify an Essence which supports Accidents; that he may be call'd an Essence; that he is not comprehended under any of Aristotle's Ten Categories; that we want proper Terms whereby to express his Nature and Perfections, but that we make use of Energical and figurative Terms, and give Examples and Similitudes to explain imperfectly what agrees to this ineffable Nature. He produces several of these about the Mystery of the Trinity, and in the first place observes that things may be One, either by Resemblance, or in Number, or in Propriety, and that as in one and the same thing there are a great many properties, so in one and the same Divine Essence there are three distinct Persons who have distinct Properties, because the Father begets, the Son is begotten, and Holy Ghost proceeds from the Father and the Son. That 'tis true indeed, that we have not among created Beings any Instance wherein one and the same Essence are three Persons; but that we are not to seek for a perfect Resemblance, since 'tis sufficient to bring some Comparisons. He produces that of a Seal, compos'd of the Material, and the Figure engraven thereon. The Seal is neither the simple Material, nor the simple Figure, but a sort of an Integer compos'd of both, and yet in reality the Seal is nothing else but the Material, thus or thus engraven, though the Figure is not the Material, nor the Material the Figure.

After this he distinguishes between the procession of the Holy Ghost, and the Generation of the Word, in that the Logos being Wisdom, partakes of the power of the Father, and may therefore be said to be of the substance of the Father; whereas the Holy Ghost being denoted by the Name of Love or Charity, which is not a Power, is not of the substance of the Father. He immediately corrects the Notion of Arianism, which those Words seem to imply, by saying that the Holy Ghost is of the substance of the Father, in the Sense that he so proceeds from him, as to have the same substance with him; but that though he be Consubstantial to the Father, yet properly speaking, he is not begotten of his substance. (This is a hard and improper Expression, contrary to the manner of the Father's speaking, and conformable to that of the Arians, though Abaelard rejects their Error.) He says that the Holy Ghost proceeds from the Father and the Son, because Love, or rather the effect of Love proceeds from Power and Wisdom, since the Reason of God's doing Good, is because he has Power to do it, and Wisdom to know that it is Good.

This gives him an occasion of refuting the Opinion of the Greeks concerning the Procession of the Holy Ghost from the Son alone, and of shewing that one might add something to the Creed, provided it were not contrary to the Faith. He explains the Coeternity of three Divine Persons, by the Influence of the Light and Rays which proceed from the Sun, and which exist the same moment with the Sun. Lastly, he pretends that the Heathen Philosophers have acknowledg'd the Trinity.

In the Third Book he treats particularly of the Power of God, and maintains that God cannot do any thing but what he does do, and cannot do all that he does not do, because God can only do what he Wills; but he cannot Will to do any thing but what he does do, because it is necessary for him that he should Will whatever is convenient; from whence it follows, that whatever he does not do is not convenient; that he cannot Will to do it, and consequently cannot do it. He himself owns, that this is his own particular Notion, that scarce any Body else is of this Opinion, that it seems contrary to the Doctrine of the Saints and to Reason, and to derogate from the greatness of God. Hereupon he starts a very difficult Objection. "A Reprobate (says he) may be sav'd; for he knows no Being but what God does save, wherefore God may save him, and consequently do something which is not necessary to be done. To this he replies, that one might very well assert that such a Man may be sav'd by the Relation to the possibility of Human Nature, which is capable of Salvation; but that it could not be affirm'd that God could save him, if we have respect to God himself, because 'tis impossible that God should do any thing, but what he ought to do. He explains this by several Examples: A Man who speaks may hold his Tongue, but that 'tis impossible for one who speaks to be at the same time silent. A Man's Voice may be heard, but one who is Deaf cannot hear it. A Field may be Cultivated and Till'd, though a Man may not cultivate it, &c.

From the Power of God he proceeds to his Immutability; he says that God does not change himself when he produces new effects, because in him there are not such new Motions and new Inclinations as are in us, but only new effects proceeding from an Eternal Will; that he cannot change Places, since he is Omni-present, and that when 'tis said that he descended into the Virgin's Womb, 'tis to denote his Humiliation; but that in being made Man, he was not chang'd, because the Divine Substance is united to the Humane Nature without a change of its Nature; and that the Person of Jesus Christ is a Compound of the Divine Logos, the Soul, and of the Flesh; That those three Natures are united in such a manner as that they retain each their own Nature; and that as the Soul is not chang'd into Flesh, so the Divine Nature is not chang'd, though it be personally united to the Soul and the Flesh. Lastly, he treats of the Divine Knowledge and Wisdom. He says that God has foreseen and pre-ordained all things; and so with respect to God nothing happens by chance, though his prescience does not destroy Free-Will. He defines it to be a free Determination of the Will, and asserts that it has been frequently experienc'd, that the Will is not constrain'd by any Violence, and that it has a power of doing or not doing a thing. He observes that this kind of Freedom in the Will does not relate to God, but only to Men, who may alter their Will, and do or not do a thing. He produces the Opinion of some who believ'd that this Freedom consists in a Power of doing both Good and Evil; but he maintains that those who are so happy as to have no power of Sinning, are nevertheless Free, and are so the more because of their being delivered from the servitude of Sin. From hence he concludes, that generally and properly speaking Free-Will is when one may voluntarily and without constraint accomplish that which it has resolv'd upon; a Liberty which is in God as well as in Men, and in all who are not destitute of the Faculty of Willing. He adds several Philosophical Niceties about the Prescience and Determination of Propositions concerning future Contingencies.

The Explications of the Lord's-Prayer, and of the Creeds of the Apostles, and of St. Athanasius, contain nothing in them which is very remarkable.

The Problems or Questions which were propos'd to him by Heloissa, are almost all of them upon hard Texts of Scripture, which Abaelard explains with a great deal of Justice and Accuracy.

The Book of Heresies is a summary Account of the principal Errors of the Hereticks, against which which he produces several Passages out of the Holy Scriptures. He therein particularly refutes the Errors against the Sacraments of the Eucharist and of Baptism, against the Administration of Penance, against the Ceremonies of the Church, and against the Invocation of Saints. Some have thought that this Piece was not Abaelard's; but 'tis not unworthy of him, and there is nothing to hinder us from thinking it to be his.

The Commentary upon the Epistle to the Romans, is a literal Explication of that Epistle, wherein he shews the Coherence and Consequence of the Apostle's Discourse, and renders his Terms intelligible by paraphrasing upon them.

Abaelard's Sermons are not very Eloquent, but such Discourses as contain in them Reflections upon the Words of Scripture, which agree to the Mysteries whereof he Treats, together with several Moral Instructions. The Sermon upon St. John the Baptist, is a very sharp Satyr against some Monks, and several Carons of his time, and particularly against St. Norbert.

St. Bernard in the general, accuses Peter Abaelard of treating of the Trinity like Arius, Abaelard's of Grace like Pelagius, and of the Incarnation like Nestorius; of having bragg'd that he was ignorant of nothing, and of being never willing to say, Nescio, i. e. I do not know; of being willing to expound inexplicable things, and to comprehend incomprehensible Mysteries: Of giving a reason for that which was above Reason; of believing nothing but what Reason discovers to us, of placing Degrees in the Trinity, Terms and Limits to the Majesty of God, and Numbers in Eternity. These are the general Reflections which he cast upon him.

In particular, he finds fault with those Expressions of Abaelard concerning the Holy Ghost, viz. That he is not of the same substance with the Father, as the Son is. He is astonish'd to find him on one side, owning that he is Consubstantial to the Father and the Son; and on the other side, denying that he proceeds from the substance of the Father and the Son. He maintains that the absolute Attributes of God, such as his Omnipotence, Wisdom and Mercy, does not agree more to one than to another of the Three Divine Persons. He opposes Abaelard's Comparison taken from a Seal and the material whereof 'tis made. He finds fault with the Definition of Faith which Abaelard makes use of, because he therein gives to Faith the name of Estimation, which is of too loose a Signification.

He omits speaking to several other Propositions of Abaelard; that Jesus Christ had not the Spirit of Fear: That the fear of God will not subsist in the other Life: That the Accidents of the Bread and Wine after the Consecration are in the Air: That the Demons do not tempt Men, but only by the Virtue of some Stones, and of some Herbs, which they know and make use of: That the Holy Ghost is the Soul of the World. Proceeding afterwards to what relates to the Incarnation, he in the first place cites the Proposition wherein Abaelard maintain'd that Jesus Christ did not come into the World on purpose to redeem Mankind; upon this he urges the Business very home to him, and shews, that neither Scripture nor Tradition acknowledge any other end of the Incarnation, beside the redeeming of Mankind from the Bondage of the Devil, into which they had fallen by the Sin of their first Parent. He charges him with such things as he only advanc'd in his Commentary by way of Query. He demonstrates in opposition to Abaelard, that the end of Redemption does not consist in the Love of Jesus Christ, since Infants are redeem'd by Baptism, before they arrive to the use of Reason, and consequently before they are capable of loving at all. Lastly, he considers three things in the Incarnation; The example of Humility which God has given us by thus abasing himself; The measure of Charity, which he extended so far as to the Death upon the Cross; and the Sacrament of Redemption, whereby he has deliver'd Men from Death by his Death. These are the Heads whereof St. Bernard treats in his large Letter against Abaelard, directed to Pope Innocent II. which makes the Eleventh of his Opuscula.

But to come to an exact knowledge of all the Errors charg'd upon Peter Abaelard, 'tis sufficient only to consult the Collection of the Propositions extracted out of his Works, which was read in the Council of Sens, and sent to the Pope. It consists of Fourteen Propositions. The first is the Comparison which he makes of a Seal of Copper, to explain the mystery of the Trinity. The second is that which he says of the Holy Ghost, viz. That the Holy Ghost is not a Power, nor of the substance of the Father, though the Three Persons of the Trinity are of the same substance. The third, that God cannot do any thing else but what he does do. The fourth, that the end of the Incarnation of Jesus Christ, was not only to redeem Mankind, but to enlighten the World with the Lustre of his Wisdom. The fifth, that speaking properly and without a Figure, we cannot say that Jesus Christ is a third Person of the Trinity. The sixth, that God has not given more Grace to him who is sav'd, than to him who is not, before the former has cooperated with his Grace; that he offers his Grace to all the World, and that it depends on the Freedom of Men's Will, whether they will make use of it or reject it. The seventh, that God ought nor nor cannot hinder Evil. The eighth, that when 'tis said that Infants contract Original Sin, this ought to be understood of the Temporal and Eternal Punishment, which is due to them because of Adam's Sin. The ninth, that the Accidents which remain after the Consecration of the Eucharist, are not join'd to the substance of the Body of Jesus Christ, as they were to the Bread and Wine, but are in the Air: That the Body of Jesus Christ retains its Figure and Lineaments, and that what we see are false appearances under which the Body of Jesus Christ is hid. The tenth, that 'tis not the outward Action, but the Will and the Intention which render Men either Good or Bad. The eleventh, that the Jews who crucified Jesus Christ in ignorance and out of Zeal for the Law, did not commit any Sin in so doing, and shall not be condemn'd for this Action, but for their former Sins which merited this Blindness. The twelfth, that those Words, whatsoever you shall bind on Earth shall Abaelards Doctrine examin'd. be bound in Heaven; are to be understood thus: Whatsoever you shall bind in this present Life, shall be bound in the present Church: That none but the Apostles had this Power, and that if it had been communicated to their Successors, 'tis to be understood only of those who have the Holy Ghost. The thirteenth, that neither the Suggestion nor the Pleasure which follows it are sinful, but the consenting to an Evil Action, and the contempt of God. The fourteenth, that Omnipotence belongs only to the Father as a Personal Attribute.

Abaelard in his Apology disowns the Heretical meaning of those Propositions, but the Question which still remains is to know in what Sense he advanc'd them. It cannot be deny'd, but that he had Catholick Notions about the mystery of the Trinity, and did believe that the Three Divine Persons were of the same Nature. The Comparison of a Seal which he makes use of to explain this Mystery is not altogether exact, nor does he pretend that it is; but he owns that we can find nothing among the Creatures, which perfectly resembles this incomparable Mystery. Nor does he deny that Power, Wisdom and Love are such Attributes as are common to the Three Divine Persons; he declares the contrary even in express Terms; but he attributes Power to the Father, Wisdom to the Son, and Love to the Holy Ghost, only by way of Appropriation; wherein he seems not to disagree from the Doctrine of the Fathers and Divines. But in the third Proposition, he does not agree with others in the manner of thinking and expressing his Thoughts; wherein he says that God can only do what he does do, and cannot do what he doth not do. This does not proceed from his disbelieving, that the Power of God in its own Nature can extend it self to other Objects; but he pretends that it being consider'd as joyn'd to the Wisdom and Will of God, he could not do any thing beside what he Wills, nor does any thing besides what he Wills and actually does.

As to that which relates to the end of the Incarnation, (which is the fourth Proposition) 'tis not to be believ'd that he deny'd that Jesus Christ had redeemed and deliver'd Men from the slavery of Sin by his Death; he asserts the contrary in several places; but he might have pretended that this redemption of Mankind from the Captivity of Sin and the Devil, was not the only Motive of the Incarnation, nor the only Advantage which Men reap'd from thence, and the Divine Logos was likewise come into the World to enlighten the Nations thereof, and to give them an Example of Virtue; the Holy Fathers have said the same thing in a great many places of their Writings.

The fifth Proposition is only a Question about a Name. He owns that the Divine Logos is one of the Persons of the Trinity; but disapproves of this Expression, viz. That Jesus Christ is a Third Person in the Trinity, a way of speaking which is not usual in the Fathers or the School-men.

The sixth Proposition about Grace, is not agreeable to St. Augustine's Principles, nor is it Pelagianism nor Semipelagianism, since he acknowledges the Necessity of Grace for the producing of any Good in us, and only maintains that God has given equal Grace to all Men, whereof every one might make a good use or reject.

The seventh Proposition is a Consequence from his way of speaking in the third.

The eighth is not to be met with in Abaelard's Writings which are now extant; he acknowledges on the contrary in his Apology, that Original Sin consists in the Guilt.

The Ninth depends upon a Philosophical Dispute about the nature of Accidents, and is of no prejudice to the Faith about the mystery of Transubstantiation, which Abaelard own'd; and when he says that they are false Appearances, by this he understands that they resemble Bread which is not there.

The Tenth may be taken in a good Sense, so that by Works we understand only the external Actions, which are not expressly Good or Bad, but as they become Voluntary.

The eleventh Proposition is insufferable.

The twelfth is an extraordinary and intolerable Exposition of our Saviour's Words about the Power of Binding and Loosing.

He disowns the thirteenth as that which he never writ.

With respect to the Fourteenth we have explained in what sense he attributes Power to the Person of the Father. He declares in his Apology, that when he deny'd the Fear of God to be in Jesus Christ and in his Elect, he thereby only understood a servile Fear and not a filial Fear, which he owns will last to all Eternity: And he therein maintains that he had never deny'd that the Soul of Jesus Christ descended really into Hell. By the Name of Estimation which he applies to Faith, he does not mean an uncertain Opinion, but an Idea which we form to our selves of the Mysteries which are reveal'd to us, and which we firmly believe.

As to the General Reflections which are cast upon him, it must be own'd that his Way of speaking and explaining the Mysteries was Novel; that he rely'd too much upon his own Reasonings; and that he was for prying too curiously into Incomprehensible Mysteries. But at the same time it must likewise be own'd that he happen'd to be in such times when this kind of Learning was in its Infancy; and that if in some places he swerv'd from the Truth, yet he argues very justly and very solidly on a great many Subjects. In a Word no body can deny but that he had great parts, much Learning and Logick, a profound Genius and penetration of Thought. We have only one Edition of his Works publish'd by the care of Francis Ambroise Councillor of State, and printed at Paris in 4to. in the Year 1616.

C H A P. VIII.

An Account of the Errors and Condemnation of Gillebert de la Porree, Bishop of Poitiers.

GILLEBERT DE LA PORREE, a Native of Poitiers, after having been Professor of Divinity in that City, was chosen Bishop of the same Diocese, A. D. 1141. He had the most able Divines of his time for his Tutors, viz. Hilary at Poitiers, Bernard at Chartres, Anselm and Radulphus at Laon; but so far as it is difficult, when one takes too great a Latitude in Philosophizing on the Mysteries of the Christian Religion, not to wander out of the right way; he maintain'd in his Commentaries on the Book of Psalms, on St. Paul's Epistles, and on the Works of Boethius, certain Propositions about the Godhead, which gave Offence to those who were not accustomed to handle Theological Matters after such a manner. He was more especially censur'd for asserting four Points concerning the Godhead, viz. 1. That the Divine Essence was not God. 2. That the Properties of the Divine Persons were not the Persons themselves. 3. That the Divine Persons were not an Attribute in any Proposition. 4. That the divine Nature was not incarnate; as also upon account of two other Articles, which were look'd upon as less considerable, viz. That there is none that Merits but Jesus Christ, and that the Elect only are truly Baptiz'd.

Gillebert continuing to maintain this Doctrine, even when advanc'd to the Episcopal Dignity, and not forbearing to assert those Propositions, in a Discourse that he made to his Clergy; an Information was brought against him by his two Arch-deacons, Arnold and Caion to Pope Eugenius III. who was then at Sienna, ready to set forward in his Journey to France. The Pope deferr'd the taking cognizance of the Affair till his arrival in that Kingdom; and the Arch-deacons in the mean while engag'd St. Bernard on their side.

The Examination of Gillebert's Doctrine was begun at Auxerre in an Assembly conven'd there in the beginning of the Year 1147. and continued in another held at Paris on the Festival of Easter in the same Year. Gillebert appear'd in the latter before the Pope, the Cardinals, the Bishops and the other Prelates of the Assembly, whilst two Doctors, viz. Adam de Petit Pont Canon of Paris and Hugh de Champfleuri, the King's Chancellor vigorously oppos'd him, deposing upon Oath, That they had heard him justify some of the Errors of which he was accus'd; but St. Bernard was the first and principal of his Accusers. Gillebert deny'd that he maintain'd those Opinions that were laid to his charge, and some of the Bishops, who had been his Pupils, were call'd to Witness on his behalf, among whom were Raoul or Radulphus Bishop of Evreux, and Ives Doctor of Chartres, who declar'd that they never heard him assert any thing of the like nature. Therefore to convict him, his Adversaries demand'd that his Commentary on Boethius's Book of the Trinity might be produc'd, in which (as they averr'd) those Errors were laid down in divers places. But this Book not being to be found, certain Propositions were alledg'd, taken out of the loose Papers of his Scholars, and amongst others, That as Man is call'd Wisdom, by reason of the Form of Wisdom; after the same manner, God is said to be his Goodness, his Wisdom, &c. St. Bernard oppos'd that Expression, and Gillebert continu'd to deny, that he ever taught or wrote, That the Godhead was not God, or that there was in God any Form or any Essence that was not God himself. He prov'd what he said, by the Testimony of the two Persons but now mention'd, and nevertheless maintain'd in the heat of the Dispute, That that which constituted God the Father, was different from that which constituted him God: This Expression gave Offence to Josselin Bishop of Soissons. Gillebert was likewise censur'd for calling the three Divine Persons, in a Prose or Hymn on the Trinity, three SINGULARS; and Hugh III. Arch-bishop of Rouen on the contrary affirm'd, that it ought to be said, That God was a SINGULAR. The Pope wearied with these Disputes, which continued two days, and not having at hand, Gillebert de la Porree's Book, that was call'd in question, thought fit to refer the determination of that Affair to the Council of Rheims, which was held in Lez in the following Year.

In the mean while Gillebert sent his Commentary on Boethius's Book of the Trinity to Pope Eugenius, who deliver'd it to be examin'd by Gotschalchus Abbot of Mount St. Eloy, of the Order of Prémontré, afterwards ordain'd Bishop of Arras, who having carefully perus'd it, made an Extract of some Propositions, which he judg'd to be erroneous, and annex'd to them certain Passages of the Fathers contrary to those Opinions: He presented this Memorial to the Pope with Gillebert de la Porree's Book. Alberic Cardinal Bishop of Ostia, and Legate of the See of Rome, in Aquitaine, in like manner made an enquiry into Gillebert's Life and Conversation, and about the Errors that he had spread abroad; but he died before the meeting of the Council of Rheims. In that Council, the Propositions contain'd in the Memorial which the Abbot Gotschalchus had drawn up, were examin'd, but in regard that he had not a ready Tongue, the Pope caus'd the said Paper to be put into St. Bernard's Hands. The Council was compos'd of the Pope, the Cardinals, and divers-Bishops of France, Germany, England and Spain; the chiefest among those of France were Geffery de Loroux Arch-bishop of Bourges, Gillebert's Metropolitan, Milo Bishop of Terouane, Josselin Bishop of Soissons, and Suger Abbot of St. Denis, who had the Administration of the Government in the absence of King Lewis the Young, during his Expedition in the Holy Land. These Prelates publicly condemn'd Gillebert de la Porree's Propositions, except Geffrey, who acted more cautiously, because he had heard it given out, that the principal Cardinals were inclin'd to be favourable to the accus'd Party.

demnation
of Gillebert de la Porree, in the Coun-
Rheims.*

On the first day of the Assembly, Gillebert caus'd large Volumes of his Works to be brought, saying, That his Adversaries only produc'd a few mutilated and mis-interpreted Passages taken out of them. Then a certain Proposition found in his Book, was alledg'd, viz. That the Name of God does not signify the Substance that is, but that by which he is. When that Proposition began to be debated, St. Bernard told Gillebert de la Porree, That 'twas not necessary to enter upon such Disputes, and that the Scandal proceeded only from hence, that many were persuad'd that he was in an Error, and that he gave it out, That the Essence, or the Nature of God, his Godhead, Wisdom, Goodness, and Omnipotence is not God, but the Form by which he is God. Now declare (said he to him) whether this be your Opinion or not? Gillebert had the boldness to reply, That the Form of God, or the Godhead by which he is God, is not God himself. Then St. Bernard said, we have an Answer to our Question, let this Declaration be committed to Writing: The Pope order'd the same thing, and Henry of Pisa, Cardinal brought Pen, Ink and Paper. Gillebert, as he was writing, cry'd out to St. Bernard, Write that the Godhead is God: St. Bernard answer'd without any hesitation, Tea, let it be written with a Steel-pen and on a Diamond, or let it be engrav'd on Stone, That the Divine Essence, Form, Nature, Godhead, Goodness, Wisdom, Virtue, Omnipotence and Greatness is truly God. Afterwards that Proposition was debated, and St. Bernard press'd Gillebert de la Porree, telling him, That if the Form of God were not God, it would be more perfect than God. He likewise cited divers Proofs out of St. Augustin's Works, which he sent for from the Library of the Church of Rheims, in which that Saint assures us, That the Goodness, Omnipotence and other Attributes of God, are not different from God himself. Geffrey, afterwards Abbot of Clairvaux, objected against Gillebert, that he disown'd the preceding Year the same Proposition that he now asserted. Gillebert reply'd, That whatever he said then, he maintain'd it at present.

Afterwards they pass'd from that Proposition to a second, viz. That one God is not the three Persons, nor the three Persons one Thing; altho' they be one God by the same Godhead, as far as they are one by the same Thing. This Proposition was likewise committed to writing, and St. Bernard oppos'd divers Passages of the Fathers. The next day, they continued to produce many other Testimonies of the Fathers contrary to that Doctrine; and then the other two Articles were propos'd and written, viz. That the Personal Properties and the Eternal Attributes of God, are not God, and that it cannot be said, That the Divine Nature assum'd the Humane Nature, but that it ought to be said, That the Person of the Son took our Nature. When they had disputed for a long time about those Propositions, the Cardinals declar'd in the end of the Assembly, that after having duly consider'd what was alledg'd on both sides, they would decide the Matter, and determine what ought to be believ'd. The Arch-bishops and Bishops being justly offended, that the Cardinals should take upon them arbitrarily to pass their Judgment in that Affair, and fearing lest they should acquit Gillebert de la Porree, whom they apparently favour'd; went the next day to meet St. Bernard: Then they drew up with his Advice, a Writing that contain'd Gillebert's Propositions, as also a contrary Confession of Faith; and after having Sign'd it, put it into the Hands of Hugh Bishop of Auxerre, and of Milo of Terouane, with Orders to make application to the Abbot Suger, to get it presented to the Pope and the Cardinals; and to acquaint them, that they had patiently heard several Discourses which ought not to have been made, purely out of respect to their Character; but being inform'd that they design'd to proceed to Sentence, they thought fit to offer them their Confession of Faith, to the end that they might be enabl'd to pass a right Judgment between both Parties: Lastly, That their Eminences already had Gillebert's Confession, who deliver'd it with a Protestation to Correct it, if they should judge it expedient; but as for their parts, they protested that they would not suffer any alteration to be made in their Form. The Cardinal at first took it very ill, that the Bishops and St. Bernard had prepar'd a Confession of Faith before-hand, and by that means prevented their Judgments; imagining, that it belong'd only to the Holy See to make such Forms, and to judge definitively of Matters of Faith. But St. Bernard qualify'd their Resentments, by remonstrating to them, That neither he, nor the Bishops pretended to exhibit a final Decision, but only an Explanation of their Sentiments. Whereupon the Pope declar'd that they all approv'd the Doctrine contain'd in the Bishops Confession of Faith, and that if some of the Cardinals were favourable to Gillebert's Person, yet none approv'd his Errors. However, he did not confirm this Determination by a solemn Decree, but contented himself only to cause Gillebert to appear in an Assembly held in the Arch-bishop's Palace at Rheims; and after having oblig'd him to retract his four Propositions, positions, he condemn'd them, and forbid the reading or the transcribing of his Book, till it were corrected by the Church of Rome. Gillebert promis'd to do it, but the Pope answer'd, that he should not be left at liberty to correct it at his pleasure: But nothing was decreed against his Person, so that he return'd to his Diocess reconcil'd with his Arch-deacons. St. Bernard was satisfy'd, that his Recantation was sincere, and that he really acquiesc'd in the Judgment of the Synod; nevertheless, some of his followers could not be persuaded to abjure his Opinions, but still persisted to maintain them, and therefore St. Bernard endeavours to confute those Miscreants, in his 8oth Sermon on the Canticles, and treats them as Hereticks. Those erroneous Doctrines were likewise impugned by Geffrey Abbot of Clairvaux, in a Treatise written purposely on that Subject, in which he collects divers Passages of the Fathers, directly opposite to Gillebert's four Propositions.

Some other Errors were also attributed to him, but so far as they were not found in his Books, 'twas judg'd sufficient to tear in pieces the loose Papers that were in the Hands of his Scholars or Pupils, and in which they were written. Geffrey cites a passage taken out of this Author's Gloss on the Psalms, in which he asserts, that the Humanity of Jesus Christ ought not to be ador'd with a Worship of Latria, but with that of Dulia; as also another extracted out of his Gloss on St. Paul's Epistles, where he says, That the name of God, and of the Son of God, is not attributed to the Humane Nature in Jesus Christ, unless by Adoption.

The Works of Gillebert de la Porree, were never as yet Printed, except one Letter on the Eucharist, publish'd by Father Luke Dachery in the Notes on Guibert de Nogent. His Commentaries on the Psalms, and on St. Paul's Epistles, and his Theological Treatise of the Trinity, are extant in Manuscript in divers Places; but we may judge by the Passages that are cited out of them, that the too great subtilty of that Man's Genius, caus'd him to fall into Expressions contrary to the simplicity of the Faith; a Misfortune that very frequently happens to those, who deviate from the Scripture and Tradition to Philosophize on the Mysteries of the Christian Religion. He died, A. D. 1154.

The Letter but now mention'd, is directed to Matthew Abbot of St. Florin, who had consulted him to know what ought to be done, in reference to a certain Priest, who thro' inadvertency had perform'd the Consecration, when there was no Wine in the Chalice, and having perceiv'd his mistake, made a new Consecration of the Bread and Wine. He returns for Answer, that 'twas requisite that that Priest should forbear saying Mass for some time, and that he should do Penance for his Transgression. For the rest, that he had done ill, in making a new Consecration of the Bread and Wine, because the Body of Jesus Christ is altogether entire under each Species, and in regard that his Body and Blood was under the Species of Bread, altho' no Wine were consecrated: And that therefore the Communion might have been administer'd with the consecrated Bread; as Children receive it under the single Species of Wine, and sick Persons under that of the Bread. This Letter is very remarkable.

CHAP. IX.

An Account of the Lives and Letters of the Popes who possess'd the See of Rome from Eugenius III. to the end of the Century.

ANASTASIUS IV. was a Citizen of Rome, and was call'd Conrad before his promotion to the Papal Dignity. He was at first Abbot of St. Anastasius, in the Diocess of Velitri, afterwards Cardinal Bishop of St. Sabina, and succeeded Pope Eugenius July 10. A. D. 1153. He possess'd the See of Rome only during one Year four Months and some Days, and died December 4. 1154.

He had for his Successour ADRIAN IV. an English-Man by Nation, who was nam'd Nicolas Break-spear before he attain'd to that Station, and was Cardinal Bishop of Albano. Eugenius III. sent him in quality of a Missionary into Norway, where he converted a great number of Infidels. He was generally reputed to be a Man of a gentle and liberal Disposition. In the beginning of his Popedom, Arnold of Brescia and his followers excited some troubles in Rome, and wounded Cardinal Gerard. Whereupon the Pope having suspended the City from Divine Service till the Romans had expell'd him and his Adherents, so that the latter were forc'd to make their escape by flight and retir'd to Otricoli in Toscany, where they were favourably receiv'd by the People; who look'd upon Arnold as a Prophet, but he was apprehended soon after, and notwithstanding the opposition made by the Viscounts of Campania, who had rescu'd him, he was deliver'd up to the Prefect or Governour of Rome, who caus'd him to be burnt at a Stake, and his Ashes to be thrown into the River Tiber, lest the People should honour him as a Saint. This Pope pronounc'd an Anathema against William King of Sicily, who had refus'd to receive his Letters, because he did not give him the Title of King, and who had seiz'd on some Territories belonging to St. Peter's Patrimony. Then his Holiness went as far as Subri to meet Frederic, who was arriv'd in Italy, accompany'd him to Rome, and set the imperial Diadem on his Head. A little while after, he made Peace with William King of Sicily, and granted him the Royal Style of King of both Sicilies. In writing to the Emperor Frederick about the Affair of the Bishop of London, he incurr'd the displeasure of that Prince, by insinuating that the Empire was a Donation receiv'd by him from the Holy See; insomuch, that the Pope was oblig'd to explain himself in a second Letter, and to say, that he meant only with respect to his Coronation and Consecration. However this did not fail to set them at variance, and their Quarrel was inflam'd, because his Holiness refus'd to confirm a certain Person, whom the Emperor had nominated to be Arch-bishop of Ravenna. 'Tis also reported that the Pope design'd to excommunicate the Emperor if he had liv'd longer, but he died of a Quinsie in the City of Anagnia, September 1. A. D. 1159. But his Body was translated to Rome, and interr'd in St. Peter's Church.

Alexander III.

After the solemnization of his Funeral Obsequies, 23 Cardinals met together, and chose at the end of three Days, Roland Cardinal Priest, with the Title of St. Mark, and Chancellor of the Church of Rome, who was nam'd ALEXANDER III. But there were three Cardinals, viz. Octavian, John of St. Martin and Guy of Crema, who undertook to carry on another Election, and Octavian having obtain'd the Suffrages of the two others, assum'd the Quality of Pope, and the Name of Victor III. Afterwards he caus'd himself to be Cloathed in the Pontifical Habit; took possession of St. Peter's Church by force, and set a Guard of Senatours over Alexander and his Cardinals, who were confin'd in the Fort during nine Days. The latter was remov'd to a Castle on the other side of the Tiber, and after having been shut up therein three Days, the People began to raise a Mutiny, insomuch, that he was conducted with divers Bishops and Cardinals a-cro's the City, to a Place call'd Nero's Victory, and there Consecrated. The Emperor Frederick was then in Italy besieging Cremona, and the two Competitors having made application to him to get their Interest maintain'd, he order'd them both to repair to Pavia, to take their Trial in a Council. Alexander not thinking fit to go thither, retir'd to Anagnia; and the Emperor in the mean while caus'd the Parties to be summon'd to the Council which he had conven'd: The former refus'd to appear, but Octavian presented himself according to Order. Then the Emperor after having inform'd the Bishops, that the Right of calling Councils belong'd to Princes, referr'd the Decision of that Quarrel to their Judgment. The Council was compos'd of fifty Arch-bishops and Bishops, and of a great number of Abbots. Victor, who was present there without an Adversary, carry'd the Cause without any difficulty, upon making Proof, that he was first invest'd with the Pontifical Mantle; put in possession of the Holy See; and acknowledg'd by the Clergy. Thus his Election, notwithstanding its irregularity, was confirm'd by the Council, and that of Alexander declar'd null: The next Day, the latter and his Adherents were solemnly excommunicated. We have still in our possession the Acts of that Council, held, A. D. 1160. with the Synodical Letter of the Fathers assembled therein, that of the Emperor, that of the Bishop of Bamberg, and that of the Canons of St. Peter at Rome, concerning the Election of Victor, and the Judgment pass'd in his favour. They accule the Cardinals, who chose Alexander, of having met together even in Pope Adrian's Life-time, to substitute Roland in his room, and of having carry'd on the last Election in a tumultuous manner. Alexander being inform'd of what was transacted against him in the Assembly of Pavia, excommunicated the Emperor Frederick.

The Declaration of the Kings of England and France, in favour of Alexander.

The other Princes of Europe were ready to do more Justice to Pope Alexander; for Henry II. King of England and Philip II. King of France, being persuaded by their Prelates of the equity of their Cause, favour'd him under Hand; but not to do any thing rashly in an Affair of that importance, they call'd Assemblies of the Prelates of their respective Kingdoms, viz. the former at Newmarket in England, and the other at Beauvais in France. It was agree'd in those Conventions that Alexander's Right was most preferable; but the Princes before they openly declar'd their Sentiments, solicited Frederick to own him as Pope, and to abandon Octavian. But perceiving him to be altogether inflexible to authorize their Declaration to the best advantage, they call'd a general Assembly of the Prelates and Noble-men of their Kingdoms, in which the Legates of the two Competitors were also present, in order to take a full cognizance of the Cause, and afterwards to declare for him, who should be acknowledg'd as lawful Pope in that Assembly, for hitherto out of respect to the Emperor they did not think fit publicly to espouse Alexander's Cause, altho' they were well inform'd of the validity of his Right. The matter being debated for some time in the Council, it evidently appear'd, from the Relation of the Cardinals, the Testimony of many Witnesses, and even the Confession of those of Victor's Party, That the latter seiz'd on the See of Rome by force; was Cloath'd in the Pontifical Vestments by Lay-men, without any Canonical Form; was excommunicated before his Consecration; and was chosen by three excommunicated Persons: On the other side, That Alexander was elected by all the other Cardinals; that he might have been immediately invest'd with the Pontifical Ornaments, if he had not at first refus'd to accept of them thro.

thro' Humility; that he afterwards assum'd them in a solemn manner; and receiv'd Consecration from the Hands of those, who had a right to administer it. It was also made appear, That the Emperor declar'd for Ostavian, a long time before the meeting of the Assembly of Pavia; that that Convention was not compos'd of 153 Bishops, as his Imperial Majesty gave it out, but only of 44; that the Prelates had taken a Resolution to suspend their Judgment, and not to own either of the two Competitors as Pope, till a general Synod were call'd, consisting of the Prelates of divers Kingdoms, or till they knew which of them was approv'd by the sound part of the Church; that they agreed to give the same Advice to the Emperor, but that he could not be induc'd to follow it; and that on the contrary, he had compell'd the Bishops, to confirm him whom he had already receiv'd; except 24, among whom was the Bishop of Pavia, in whose City, that Assembly was held: Therefore the Prelates of England and France, being well satisfied with these Reasons, acknowledg'd Alexander as lawful Pope, at the same time Excommunicating Ostavian with his Adherents, and the two Kings in like manner follow'd the Judgment of the Council.

The Emperor being inform'd of the Transactions in France, held a second Assembly at Lodi, in which assisted Pilgrin Arch-bishop of Aquileia, Guy elect Arch-bishop of Ravenna, divers Bishops, a great number of Abbots and some Noble-men. He caus'd the Election of Ostavian to be confirmed therein, and several Letters of Excuse were read, that (as it was given out) were sent by the Kings of Denmark, Norway, Hungaria and Bohemia, as also by six Arch-bishops, twenty Bishops, and many Abbots, as well of the Order of Clairvaux as of other Congregations, and in which they acknowledg'd Ostavian as Pope: Hubert Arch-bishop of Milan, the Consuls of that City, and the Bishops of Placentia, Brescia, Bononia and some others were excommunicated in that Council, which was held in the Month of June, A. D. 1161. and continu'd during some Days.

In the mean while Alexander took Sanctuary in the Dominions of William King of Sicily, Alexander because the Emperor Frederick was Master of a great part of Italy, and waited for a favourable Opportunity to pass over from thence into France, where the distress'd Popes always met with a Place of Refuge, during the Persecutions that were rais'd against them. At last he found means to set out to Sea, and arriv'd in France on the Festival of Easter, A. D. 1162. where he was receiv'd by the Kings of France and England, who went to meet him as far as Torcy sur Loire, alighted in his presence, and conducted him on the Road, each of them holding the Reins of his Horse's Bridle. Frederick perceiving that Alexander retir'd to a place of safety, and was own'd by all the Christians of Europe, except the Germans and some Italians, caus'd a Proposal to be made to the King of France, that there should be an Interview between them at Avignon, or in some other Frontier-Town; that he would bring Victor along with him, and that the King should in like manner cause Alexander to appear there; that the Election of both should be thoroughly examin'd in an Assembly compos'd of the Prelates of Germany, France and Italy, and that all Parties should entirely submit to their final Decision. His Design was to cause both Competitors to be rejected, and to procure the Election of a third Person. However, the King of France approv'd his Proposal, and went to the Place appointed, but Alexander being more mistrustful than that Prince, refus'd to accompany him, and contented himself only to send some Cardinals thither to maintain his Right. The Emperor was highly offended, that the King had not brought Alexander, and so far as he was the stronger 'twas much to be fear'd lest he should hem him in on every side, and take him Prisoner, if the King of England had not speedily caus'd his Troops to march on purpose to rescue him. This unexpected Recruit having broken Frederick's Measures, he caus'd another Proposal to be made to the King, viz. that he should come to meet him with the Prelates of his Kingdom, to receive the Sentence that should be pronounc'd by the Prelates of the Empire, as to the Contest between the Competitors to the Popedom; affirming, That they only had a right to judge of the validity of the Election of a Pope: The King reply'd, That his Prelates and Clergy being the Sheep of the Pope of Rome, 'twas their Interest to take cognizance of the Person, who was to be their supreme Pastor. Whereupon the intercourse was discontinu'd, and the King retir'd with his Forces.

Pope Alexander arriv'd at Paris, A. D. 1163. and at his departure from that City, held a Council at Tours, where he renew'd the Anathema's published against Ostavian and Frederick. The Antipope Ostavian died the next year at Lucca on the Festival of Easter, and his followers substituted in his room, Guy of Crema, who took the Name of Paschal III. The Death of Ostavian weaken'd his Party, and the Italians wearied with the Emperor's tyrannical Government, began to incline towards Alexander's side; besides that Conrad chosen Arch-bishop of Mentz, and many other Bishops of Germany, declar'd in his favour. Therefore Alexander taking the advantage of so favourable a Conjunction return'd to Italy, and made his publick Entry into the City of Rome in the Month of November, 1165. after having resided three Years in France. He was joyfully receiv'd by the People: But on the other side, Frederick us'd his utmost endeavours to maintain Paschal the Antipope, and to that purpose call'd an Assembly at Wurtzburg, A. D. 1166. in which he himself took an Oath, and caus'd the like Oath to be given to the most part of the Lords and Prelates of the Assembly, that they would not acknowledge any other Pope but Paschal, and that they would cause all those who depended on them, to submit to his Authority. The Deputies of the King of England, who was at variance with Pope Alexander, by reason of the Contests he had with Thomas Arch-bishop of Canterbury, took the same Oath.

Afterwards Frederick appear'd at the Head of an Army, and pass'd into Italy to put Paschal in possession of the Papal See: He enter'd Lombardy, besieg'd Ancona, and the next Year encamp'd near Rome; then he defeated the Romans in Battel; took part of the City; seiz'd on St. Peter's Church, and would have made himself Master of the whole City, if a Distemper, that rag'd in his Army had not oblig'd him speedily to retire to Lombardy. Alexander being thus deliver'd from so imminent a danger, had recourse to his thundering Bulls, and pronounc'd a Sentence of Deposition against Frederick in a Council held at Lateran, A. D. 1168. The Italians animated by that Sentence, revolved against the Emperor, submitted to Alexander, and expell'd the Schismatical Bishops. Frederick having attack'd the Milanese Troops, lost Twenty thousand Men, and was forc'd to shut himself up in Pavia, but not believing himself to be safe there, in regard that the whole Country of Lombardy had declar'd against him, he at last found means to escape into Germany, not without much difficulty. In the mean while Paschal continu'd in possession of St. Peter's Church, and Alexander resid'd at Benevento: The latter return'd from thence in the end of the Year 1169. and receiv'd the City of Frascati under his Protection: Whereupon the Romans were incens'd against him, and only promis'd to give him admittance into Rome, as their Sovereign, on condition that he should cause the Walls of Frascati to be demolished. He did it accordingly; but the Romans not having kept their word, he caus'd that Place to be fortified again, left a Garrison therein, retir'd to Anagnia: and from thence pass'd to Benevento, where he receiv'd in 1170. the Proposal made to him by Manuel Comnenus Emperor of the East, to re-unite the Greek Church to the Latin, and to own the supreme Authority of the See of Rome, on condition that he should Crown him Emperor of the West. The Pope commended his Design about the Re-union of the two Churches, and promis'd to contribute, as far as 'twas possible towards the carrying it on; but as for the demand of the Empire, he answer'd, That the matter appear'd to him to be too difficult, and that it did not lye in his Power to grant what he desir'd.

Some time after, Paschal the Antipope died at Rome, and those of his Party chose for Pope, John Abbot of Struma: Altho' Frederick had own'd his Authority, yet he did not forbear to send the Bishop of Bamberg to Alexander to negotiate a Treaty of Peace with him. That Prelate had a Conference with Alexander in Campania, and told him that his Master did not design any longer to act contrary to his Interest, but so far as he refus'd to declare plainly, that he would acknowledge him as lawful Pope, or to promise Obedience to him, they parted without concluding anything. Altho' Alexander's Affairs prosper'd every day more and more; nevertheless the Romans could not be induc'd to receive him into their City, and he usually resid'd either at Frascati or in Campania.

Frederick carry'd on a War in Italy, A. D. 1175. but not being succesful in his Enterprizes, he renew'd the Negotiations of Peace; so that the Pope sent Legates to treat with him about it, but they were not able to come to any Agreement. The next Year Frederick's Army was entirely defeated by the Milanese Forces, insomuch that he was constrain'd to send Ambassadors to Alexander to conclude a Treaty of Peace: The Conditions were propos'd and were at last ratify'd in 1177. at Venice, where the Emperor and the Pope had an Interview: The former abandon'd the Party of Octavian, Guy and John of Struma, and promis'd Obedience to Alexander, who took off the Excommunication denounc'd against Frederick, and re-admitted him to the Communion of the Church of Rome. Some Authors relate divers fabulous Circumstances concerning this Reconciliation, and amongst others, that the Pope made an escape to Venice in a Disguise; that he was forc'd to implore the assistance of the Doge; that the Emperor sent his Son Otho with a Fleet to oblige the Venetians to deliver up the Pope into his Hands; that they defeated him and took him Prisoner; that the same Son agreed upon certain Articles of Peace with the Pope; that Frederick came in Person to confirm the Treaty; that he prostrated himself before all the People, at the Feet of the Pope, who set his Foot on his Neck, pronouncing these Words; It is written, thou shalt tread upon the Basilisk, and trample under Foot the Lion and the Dragon; that Frederick answer'd, I do not obey you but Peter; and that Alexander reply'd, both me and Peter. All these particulars are so many Fables, the Falshood of which is prov'd by Alexander's Letters, and by the Testimony of the Historians of that time. 'Tis worth the while to observe, after what manner Alexander speaks upon occasion of that Peace in his Letter.

" On the 21st Day of July (says he) by the Emperor's Order, the Son of the Marquess Albert, and his Imperial Majesty's Chamberlain, took on Oath in the presence of divers Ecclesiastical and Secular Princes of the Empire; that upon the Emperor's arrival at Venice, he should ratify by Oath, the Articles of the Peace of the Church that were already agreed upon; that he should grant Peace to William King of Scicily for fifteen Years, and a Truce for Seven, to the Lombards. On the 24th Day of the same Month, the Emperor came to the Church of St. Nicolas, at the distance of a Mile from Venice, and having abjur'd the Schism, as well as all the Bishops and German Princes, he receiv'd Absolution with them; afterwards being arriv'd at Venice, he gave us the marks of his Obedience, with all manner of Humility, at the entrance of St. Mark's Church, in the presence of an innumerable Multitude of People; receiv'd from us the Blessing of Peace; gave us the right Hand; and conducted us with Devotion to the Altar. The next day, being the Festival of St. James, we went to St. Mark's Church to celebrate Mass; the Emperor came to meet us without the Church; gave us the right Hand; re-conducted us when Divine Service was ended; held the Stirrup, whilst we got up on Horse-back; and perform'd all the Devoirs and Respects due to us, that his Predecessors were wont to do. The Matters of Fact are thus related by the Pope himself in three Letters.

The next day, the Emperor went to pay a Visit to the Pope, and on August 1. he himself took an Oath, the same thing being likewise done by the German Lords, to observe the Peace that was concluded. Afterwards Absolution was given to those that had taken part with the Antipopes, and who promis'd for the future, to obey Pope Alexander and his Successors. On September 16. the Pope held a Council of the Bishops of Italy and Germany, in which the Treaty of Peace was confirm'd, and the Anathemas renew'd against the Schismaticks, who were not as yet return'd to the Bosom of the Church, and the Emperor ratify'd it by publick Letters. Lastly, the Emperor before he left Venice, concerted with the Pope Matters relating to the restitution of the Revenues of the Church of Rome; and set forward in his Journey to Lombardy, whilst the Pope went to Anagnina, where he arriv'd December 14. and from whence the next Year, he was re-call'd to Rome by the Clergy, Senate and People of that City. Thus an end was put to the Schism of the Church of Rome, and Alexander continu'd in the peaceable Possession of that See till his Death, which happen'd in the Month of August, A. D.

Cardinal HUMBALD, a Native of Lucca, was chosen in his Place, and surnam'd LUCIUS III. He was expell'd Rome by the Senators, and retir'd to Verona, where he died, November 25. A. D. 1185.

Lucius III.

LAMBERT Arch-bishop of Milan, succeeded him under the Name of URBAN III. These two Popes had several Conferences at Verona with the Emperor Frederick, about the putting of the Treaty of Peace in Execution, and the Election of the Arch-bishop of Trier. The latter had also some Contests with the Emperor, about certain Territories left by the Princess Matilda to the Church of Rome; the disposal of the Estates of the Bishops after their decease, which the Emperor claim'd as his Right; and the Taxes that were allotted to be paid to the Abbesses. And indeed, Matters were carry'd to that height, that Urban threaten'd to excommunicate the Emperor, and that Prince call'd an Assembly of the Prelates and Princes of Germany at Geinlenhusen, A. D. 1186. to maintain his Rights, in which it was determin'd to write to the Pope about that Affair. Their Letter extremely incens'd his Holiness, and caus'd him to take a resolution to denounce a Sentence of Excommunication against the Emperor, which would have been actually put in Execution, if the Inhabitants of Verona had not entreated him not to do it in their City. Therefore he departed from thence with that design, but was prevented by Death, which happen'd October 17. A. D. 1187.

Urban III.

An Assembly at Geinlenhusen in 1186.

The next day, ALBERT, Cardinal Priest of St. Laurence, and Chancellor of the Church of Rome, was plac'd on that See, and bore the Name of GREGORY VIII. His Popedom did not continue during two entire Months; for he died December 16. in the same Year.

Gregory VIII.

After a vacancy of twenty days, the See of Rome was fill'd up by PAULINUS Cardinal of Palestrina, chosen Jan. 26. A. D. 1188. and nam'd CLEMENT III. Under his Popedom the Christian Princes undertook a Crusade for the recovering of the Places that Saladin had taken from them in the Levant. The Emperor Frederick, Richard I. surnam'd Cœur de Lion King of England and Philip II. King of France, were engag'd in that Expedition. The first was drowned in 1190. as he was washing himself in a small River between Antioch and Nice, and his Son Henry succeeded him in the Imperial Dignity. Pope Clement III. died April 10. A. D. 1191.

Clement III.

HYACINTHUS, Cardinal Deacon with the Title of St. Mary, was chosen in his Place, under the Name of CELESTIN III. and after having been ordain'd on Holy Saturday, was plac'd in St. Peter's Chair on Easter-day. At that time, Henry arriv'd with an Army near Rome, and determin'd to enter the City to be Crown'd Emperor. Forasmuch as the Pope put him off from time to time, the Romans sent Deputies to promise him, That if he would engage to preserve their Rights and Privileges, and to demolish the Castles that were built at Frascati, they would admit him, and would oblige the Pope to solemnize his Coronation. He accordingly consented, and took an Oath before the Pope, at the Door of St. Peter's Church, that he would maintain the Ecclesiastical Rights; restore St. Peter's Patrimony; and rase the Citadel of Frascati. Afterwards the Pope caus'd him to enter the Church, and actually Crown'd him Emperor, and Constance his Wife, the Daughter of Roger King of Sicily, Empress. William surnam'd the Good King of Sicily, the Nephew of that Princess, dying, she laid claim to the Crown; but Tancred her Bastard Brother excluded her, and got Possession of the Throne, which gave occasion to the War that Henry undertook to subdue that Kingdom. He march'd into Italy with a formidable Army, A. D. 1196. and treated the Nobility of Sicily in so outrageous a manner, that his own Wife being sensibly afflicted with the Calamities of her Nation, joyn'd with them against her Husband, and compell'd him by force to grant them reasonable reasonable terms of Peace. Henry did not long survive that Reconciliation, for he dy'd at Messina in 1197. Pope Celestin excommunicated him some time before, for detaining Prisoner, Richard King of England, whom Leopold Duke of Austria had sold to him, after having seiz'd on that valiant Prince in his Territories, as he was returning from his Expedition to the Holy Land. Upon account of that Excommunication, the Arch-bishop of Messina refus'd to bury him in consecrated Ground, till he had consulted the Pope. Therefore he went to meet his Holiness, and requested of him three Things, viz. 1. A Licence to intert the Emperor's Body according to due Form. 2. The deliverance of Marcwald his Imperial Majesty's Chief Justice, who was besieged by the Romans. And 3. That Frederick the Son of Henry, might be Crown'd King of Sicily. Celestin reply'd as to the first Article, That the Emperor could not be bury'd without the consent of the King of England, and till the Mony were restor'd to that Prince, which he had exacted from him for his Ransom: As to the second Article, That the setting of Marcwald at Liberty depended on the Pleasure of the Romans. He granted the last Article, on condition that the Sum of a thousand Marks of Silver should be paid to him, and as many to the Cardinals; and after that the Empress had taken an Oath upon the Holy Gospels, That Frederick was begotten in lawful Wedlock of Her and Henry: As for the Succession to the Empire, it was contested between Philip the Brother of Henry deceased, and Orbo the Son of the Duke of Saxony, as we shall have occasion to shew hereafter. Pope Celestin did not long survive the Emperor Henry; for he fell Sick on the Festival of Christmas in the same Year, and died Jan. 8. A. D. 1198.

It remains only for compleating the History of these Popes, to give some account of their Letters.

Anastasi-
sius IV's
Letters.

The Letters of Anastasius IV. are few in number. In the First, he reprehends Engelbaud Arch-bishop of Tours, for neglecting to acquaint him with the high Misdemeanours of which the Bishop of Treguier is accus'd, and orders him incessantly to Summon that Prelate to appear in his Court; and if he find him guilty of the Crimes laid to his charge, that is to say, of having riotously wasted the Revenues of his Church; of having conferr'd Orders contrary to the Canonical Constitutions; and of having committed Simony and Perjury; to send him to the Holy See, to the end that he might be punish'd according to the severity of the Canons.

In the Second, he writes to Hugh Arch-bishop of Sens and to his Suffragans, to look upon the Inhabitants of Vezelay, as under a Sentence of Excommunication, by reason of the Persecutions that they rais'd against Ponce Abbot of the Monastery of that place. He writes the same thing to the Count and Lords of Burgundy in the Third, which only differs from the former in the Superscription.

By the Fourth, he orders Peter Arch-bishop of Bourges to excommunicate the Count of Nevers and the Inhabitants of Vezelay, unless they gave Satisfaction to the Abbot and Monastery of Vezelay, within thirty days after the Monition is exhibited to them.

He writes again on the same Subject to Lewis VII. King of France, to the Bishops of that Kingdom, and to Ponce Abbot of Vezelay, in his Fifth, Sixth and Seventh Letters.

In the Eleventh, he confirms the Statutes of the Regular Canons of St. John at Laveran.

In the Twelfth, he takes into his Protection, the Order of the Knights of St. John at Jerusalem, and ratifies their Privileges.

Adrian
IV's
Letters.

The First of the Letters attributed to Pope Adrian IV. is a Privilege granted to the King of England, to make himself Master of Ireland, refer'd to by Matthew Paris. But it is a very doubtful Piece, and there are no grounds to rely upon it.

The Second, is the Letter that gave offence to Frederick, and in which the Pope complains, That the Bishop of London was misus'd in the Emperor's Dominions, as he was returning from the Holy See, and that he did not take care to revenge that Indignity. To induce him to do it, he entreats him to call to mind, with what kindness he was receiv'd at Rome the preceding Year, as also the Honour and Dignity that he had conferr'd upon him in setting the Imperial Crown on his Head. He declares at the same time, That he does not repent of having given him Satisfaction, and that he should be very glad to find an opportunity, to bestow on him greater Favours if it were possible.

This Letter being deliver'd to Frederick, by Bernard Cardinal of St. Clement, and by Roland Cardinal Priest of St. Mark, whom the Pope had sent on purpose to bear it: That Prince at first entertain'd them very honourably, but at the second Audience, having read that Passage of the Letter, in which it was express'd, That the Pope had conferr'd on him the notable Benefit of the Crown, he fell into so great a Passion, that he could not forbear reviling the two Legates who had brought it, ordering them immediately to retire out of his Dominions. After their departure, he prohibited all his Subjects to go to Rome, and set Guards on the Frontiers to stop those who were about to travel thither. Adrian having heard this News, wrote the Third Letter to the Bishops of France and Germany, in which after having related the Matter as it happen'd, he entreats them to use their utmost endeavours to oblige Frederick to return to his Duty. At the same time he wrote to him in the Fourth Letter, That it was not his meaning that the Word Beneficium should be taken for a Fee, but for a good Action; that in that sense, it might well be said, That he had done him a Favour in conferring on him the Imperial Crown, because he perform'd an Act of Kindness in so doing; and that when he wrote, that he gave him the Imperial Crown, Giving denotes no more than that he set it upon his Head: That they who had otherwise interpreted those Terms, were spiteful Persons, that only sought for an opportunity to disturb the Peace of the Church and of the Empire: Lastly, if that Expression were offensive to him, he ought not nevertheless to have acted as he had done, nor to forbid all his Subjects in general to go to Rome, but he might have given him notice of it by his Ambassadors. He gives him to understand that he sent two other Cardinals, by the advice of Henry Duke of Bavaria, and entreats him to receive them favourably, to the end that the Business might be accommodated through the Mediation of that Duke.

The Letter in which Frederick desires the confirmation of Guy the Son of the Count of Blancdrata chosen Arch-bishop of Ravenna, follows the former. It is written in very respectful and submissive Terms.

The Pope denies him that favour in the Fifth Letter, under pretence, that he was unwilling to remove Guy from the City of Rome; and in the Sixth, complains of Frederick's Letter, because he set his own Name before that of the Pope, exacted Homage and Fidelity of the Bishops; refus'd to admit his Legates to Audience, and hinder'd his Subjects from going to Rome.

The Seventh is written to the Arch-bishop of Thessalonica, whom he exhorts to be reconcil'd with the Church of Rome, and to procure the Re-union of the Greek Church.

The Eighth is a Confirmation of the Treaty made with William King of Sicily.

The Fifteen following, are taken out of the fourth Tome of the Historians of France by Du-Chesne. The Ten first and the Twenty Fourth, are written in favour of Hugh, Chancellor of that Kingdom, to whom he grants an Arch-deaconry of Arras, and the Revenues of a Prebend in the Cathedral of Paris: He likewise wrote to the Bishops of Arras and Paris, and to some other Persons on the same Subject. The Three other Letters are directed to King Lewis; and in the Twenty first, he advises him to bring the Inhabitants of Vezelay under subjection to the Abbots of that place, and to oblige them to restore what they had taken from him.

The Twenty fifth, twenty sixth, Twenty seventh and Twenty eighth, relate in like manner to the Abbey of Vezelay.

By the Twenty ninth, he renders the Abbey of Baume in the Diocese of Besançon, subject to the Jurisdiction of that of Cluny, as a Priory that ought to depend on it.

The Six following, relate to the Primacy of Toledo, and the Affairs of Spain.

The Thirty sixth, Thirty seventh, Thirty eighth, Thirty ninth and Fortieth, treat of Matters concerning the Primacy, Patriarchate and Rights of the Arch-bishop of Grado.

In the Forty seventh and last, publish'd by M. Baluzius and directed to Berenger Metropolitan of Narbonne, he confirms the Declaration made by Ermengarda Lady of the Mannor of Narbonne, by which she prohibited the Alienation of the Revenues and Estates of the Arch-bishop of that Province after his decease, and denounces an Anathema against those who should presume to do it.

Father Dachery has inserted in the first Tome of his Spicilegium, a Privilege granted by Pope Adrian IV. to the Monastery of Casauré.

The First Letter of Alexander III. is written to the Canons of Benonia about his Election. Alexander III's

The Second to Arnulphus Bishop of Lisieux on the same Subject, and about the Assembly Leuvers. of Pavia.

The Third is the Bull for the Canonization of Edward I. King of England.

The following relate to the Affair of Thomas Becket Arch-bishop of Canterbury, except the Thirty second, which is an Instruction to the Sultan of Iconium, who was desirous to embrace the Christian Religion.

The Forty fifth, Forty sixth and Forty seventh, are the Letters which were written by him, concerning the Treaty of Peace, that he made at Venice, with the Emperor Frederick.

In the Forty eighth, he recommends to a certain Indian King, commonly call'd Prestre John, the Legate, whom he sent into his Country.

In the Forty ninth, he returns thanks to Hugh, for a Book which he had sent to him, and entreats him to endeavour to procure the Reconciliation of the Emperor of Constantinople, with the Church of Rome.

The Fiftieth, is the Letter for the calling of the General Council at Lateran.

The Fifty first, is a Letter about the Opinion of Peter Lombard, who maintain'd, That Jesus Christ, quatenus Man, is not a Thing.

The Fifty second, is a Confirmation of the Rights and Privileges of the Arch-bishop of Colen.

The Two following, relate to the Erection of the Bishoprick of Alexandria della Paglia, a City newly built in the Milanese Territory. He nominated the first Bishop, but to the end that that Nomination might not be prejudicial to the Inhabitants, he left them the liberty of proceeding to an Election for the future.

The Fifty fifth, Fifty sixth and Fifty seventh, contain the Confirmation of the promotion of John to the Bishoprick of St. Andrew in Scotland, against Hugh who was nominated by the King.

By the Fifty eighth, directed to Casimir Duke of Poland, he ratifies certain Constitutions made by that Prince for the preservation of Church Revenues.

The Fifty ninth, is a circular Letter directed to all the Christian Princes, in which he exhorts them to afford succours to the Christians of the Holy-Land, and renews to those that do so, the Privileges and Immunities granted by Urban and Eugenius his Predecessors, and puts their Estates, Wives and Children under the protection of the Holy See.

The Sixtieth, is directed to all the Bishops of Christendom on the same Subject, to the end that they might publish the preceding Letter in their respective Diocesses, and induce the Princes and People to so pious an Undertaking.

In the Three following Letters, directed to certain Prelates of England, he gives them an Account after what manner he concluded a Treaty of Peace with the Emperor at Venice.

These are the Letters of Pope Alexander III. that are contain'd in the first Collection, to which three Additions have been since annex'd; the first of those Additions comprehends Fifty six Letters, publish'd by Father Sirmondus, in the end of the Works of Peter Abbot of Celles.

In the first Eighteen, which are almost all directed to Peter Abbot of St. Remy at Rheims, he nominates him in a Commission with others to determine divers particular Affairs.

The Nineteenth, directed to the Arch-bishop of Upsal in Sweden and his Suffragans, contains several Constitutions against Simony, and against the Privileges of Clergy-men, taken out of the Councils and the Decretals of the Popes.

In the Twentieth, he recommends to the Charity of the Northern Christians, Fulcus Bishop of the Estons, a People of Sweden.

In the Twenty first, he exhorts the Northern Kings and Potentates, to perform the Duties of Christian Princes, to endeavour to procure the advancement of the Church by encountering its Enemies.

In the Twenty second, directed to the Arch-bishop of Upsal and his Suffragans, he specifies the Penances that they ought to impose for the Crimes of Incest and Uncleaness, and inveighs against two Abuses that prevail'd in their Country, viz. the first, That the Priests were wont to celebrate Mass with the Lees of Wine, or with Crums of Bread steeped in Wine; and the second concerning clandestine Marriages, that were contracted without the Benediction of the Priest.

The following relate to many particular Affairs of Churches or Monasteries, which he himself decides, or for the determination of which he grants a Commission to other Persons in the respective places.

In the second Addition, are compris'd 109 Letters directed to Lewis VII. King of France, or to the Prelates of his Kingdom, the greatest part of which relate to the Affairs of the Churches of France; as also some to the Contest between Alexander and Victor, and others are only recommendatory Letters or full of Compliments. They are taken out of the Collection of the Historians of France, by Du-Chesne.

The last Addition contains 22 Letters, of which the six first are written on the Schism rais'd by Victor; the two following treat of the Privileges of the Canons of Challon: In the Ninth, he acquaints Henry Arch-bishop of Rheims, after what manner he was receiv'd in Rome: The five following were written in favour of the Church of Vezelay: In the Fifteenth, he commends Hugh Bishop of Rhodes, for establishing a general Peace in his Diocess: The Seventeenth and Eighteenth, are the Bulls for the Canonization of Edward King of England and St. Bernard: The Twentieth, Twenty first and Twenty second, are Acts of Approbation of the Order of the Knights of St. James in Spain; of that of the Monks of the Abbey of St. Saviour at Messina; and of that of the Carthusians, and of their Constitutions. There are also in the Addition to the Tenth Tome of the Councils, five other Letters attributed to Alexander III. of which the four first relate to the Immunities of the Schools and Chapter of Paris, and the last to those of the Chapter of Anagnia.

Lucius
ters.

Lucius III. having possess'd the See of Rome but a little while, has left us only three Letters.

By the First, he takes off the Excommunication of William King of Scotland and the Suspension of his Kingdom, denounced by the Arch-bishop of York, in Pope Alexander's Life-time, for opposing the Consecration of John, elected Bishop of St. Andrew.

The Second Letter is directed to Henry II. King of England, in which he exhorts that Prince to permit a Tax to be rais'd in his Kingdom, for the Relief of the Holy-Land.

The Third is a Decree against the Hereticks of that time, in which he pronounces a perpetual Anathema against the Cathari, the Patarins, those that style themselves the Humbled or the poor People of Lyons, the Passagians, the Josepins and the Arnoldists, and prohibits all sorts of Persons to profess Divinity or to Preach publickly, unless they have obtain'd a License from the Holy See, or from the Diocesan Bishop. He likewise condemns all those who presume to maintain any Doctrines or Practices different from those of the Church of Rome, concerning the Sacrament of the Body and Blood of Jesus Christ, Baptism, the Remission of Sins, Marriage, or the other Sacraments, with the r Abettors and Adherents: He ordains, That Clergymen, convicted of those Errors shall be depos'd, and Laicks deliver'd up into the Hands of the Secular Judges to be punish'd, unless they immediately abjure them, without allowing any Pardon to Relapies: He enjoyns the Arch-bishops and Bishops to make a Visitation every Year, either Personallly or by their Arch-deacons, in order to discover such Miscreants: He exhorts the Counts, Barons, Lords and Magistrates vigorously to aid and assist the Clergy-men in the Prosecution of those Hereticks, under pain of Excommunication, and Privation of their Dignities: And in that Case, he grants a peculiar Jurisdiction to the Arch-bishops and Bishops, over such Persons as enjoy certain Immunities and are subject only to the Holy See, provided they be obey'd as the Pope's Delegates, notwithstanding all manner of Privileges.

Urban III. gave notice to all the Bishops, of his Election by a circular Letter, dated January 11. A. D. 1186. which is the first of his Letters. Urban III's Letters.

The Second, dedicated to William King of Scotland, relates to the Contest between the Bishops of St. Andrew and Dunckell, the Tryal of which was referr'd to the See of Rome, in the time of his Predecessor, but could not be determin'd, till the Popedom of Urban, who entreats the King in this Letter to take the Bishop of Dunckell into his Protection, and makes the same Request in the following, to Jocelin Bishop of Glasco.

In the Fourth, he writes to Baldwin Arch-bishop of Canterbury, about the building of a new Church in Honour of St. Stephen and St. Thomas.

In the last, he approves the Foundation of a House of Hospitallers at Bononia, and ratifies their Constitutions and Privileges.

Gregory VIII. was no sooner advanc'd to the Papal Dignity, but he wrote a Circular Letter to all the Faithful, to exhort them to relieve the Holy Land. He gives a lively description of the most deplorable Calamities that beset the Christians, when the City of Jerusalem was taken by Saladin, and earnestly presses the Faithful to undertake an Expedition for the recovery of it out of the Hands of that implacable Enemy of Christianity. He grants Indulgences to those, who shall take upon them the Cross for the Holy War, and renews in their favour, the special Privileges that were allow'd by his Predecessors in the like Case. Gregory VIII's Letters.

In the Second Letter, he ordains, That to deprecate the Wrath of God, the Faithful should be oblig'd to fast during five Years, on all Fridays from Advent to Christmasts, and that they should abstain from Flesh on Wednesdays and Saturdays.

By a Third Letter, he confirms the Orders that his Predecessors had given to all the Ecclesiastical Judges to determine the Law-suits of private Persons.

The Five first Letters of Clement III. relate to the Contest that arose between John and Hugh about the Bishoprick of St. Andrew in Scotland. Clement III's Letters.

In the Sixth, he confirms the Rights and Immunities of the Church of that Kingdom.

The Seventh, is the Act for the Canonization of Otto Bishop of Bamberg.

The First Letter of Celestin III. is directed to the Prelates of England, whom he orders to excommunicate all those, who shall refuse to obey William Bishop of Ely Legate of the Holy See and Regent of the Kingdom in the absence of King Richard, who was engag'd in the Expedition to the Holy Land. Celestin III's Letters.

By the Second, he takes off the Excommunication denounced by Geffry Arch-bishop of York, against Hugh Bishop of Durham.

The Third is the Act for the Canonization of St. Ubald Bishop of Eugubio.

The Fourth, is an elegant Exhortation to induce the Christian Princes to make Peace, that they may be in a Condition to regain the Holy Land.

In the Fifth, directed to the Bishop of Lincoln, he gives him a Commission to take cognizance of the Misdemeanours and Crimes of which the Arch-bishop of York was accus'd.

The Sixth, sent to the Dean and Arch-deacon of the Church of Lincoln, is written on the same Subject.

In the Seventh, he constitutes Hubert Arch-bishop of Canterbury, his Legate in England; and in the Eighth, orders the Bishops of England to acknowledge and obey him in that Quality.

The Ninth, is a Fragment of a Letter directed to the Arch-bishop of Sens, in which he declares null the Divorce that Philip King of France had made with Queen Barilda, the Daughter of the King of Denmark, under pretence of nearness of Kin, and enjoyns him to re-take her.

In the Tenth, he entreats Hubert Arch-bishop of Canterbury, to levy Recruits to be sent into the Holy Land to King Richard.

The Three following Letters are written about the Disorders caus'd in the Church of Tork by the Arch-bishop: He commits the Care and Reformation of that Church to Simon Dean of the Chapter; and so far as the Arch-bishop had appeal'd to the Holy See, before the Bishop of Lincoln exhibited an Information against him, he allows him time to come to Rome till the Festival of St. Martin; but in case he do not then appear, he orders the Bishop of Lincoln to proceed against him, and in the mean while suspends him from the Government of his Province.

In the Fourteenth, he orders Hubert Arch-bishop of Canterbury, to oblige those who had taken upon them the Cross for the Expedition to the Holy Land, to set forward on their Journey, at least, unless they were prevented by a lawful Impediment.

This Letter is follow'd by that of Philip Bishop of Beauvais, written to Pope Celestin; in which that Prelate complains, That the King of England enter'd the Territories of Beauvaisis with his Forces in a hostile manner, and took him Prisoner. The Pope return'd an Answer in the following Letter, That he had no reason to make a Complaint of the Misfortune that befall'd him, since he presum'd to take up Arms contrary to the Duty of his Profession; besides, that the Conduct of the King of England ought not to be blam'd, in regard that the King of France had unjustly taken from him divers Towns, contrary to the solemn Promise that he had made to that Prince not to commit any Hostilities against him, till his return to his Dominions: That instead of performing that Promise, he determin'd to take the advantage of his Confinement: And that the King of England being at last set at Liberty, had good reason to oppose the Enterprizes of the King of France.

In the Sixteenth, he enjoys the Arch-bishop of Canterbury, the Bishop of Lincoln, and the Abbot of St. Edmund, to re-establish in one of the Churches of England, the Monks that were turn'd out under colour of the Pope's Bull got by surprize, upon a false Exhibition.

In the last, directed to William King of Scotland, he confirms the Rights and Privileges of the Churches of that Kingdom.

CHAP. X.

A Relation of the several Contests that Thomas Becket Arch-bishop of Canterbury had with Henry II. King of England.

The Life of Thomas Becket, before he was Arch-bishop of Canterbury.

THOMAS BECKET was a Native of the City of London, the Capital of England: His Father was nam'd Gilbert and his Mother Matilda. Gilbert, in his Youth, took upon him the Cross for the Holy War, but upon his arrival at Jerusalem, he was taken Prisoner and made a Slave by the Saracens. During his Imprisonment, he found means to obtain the favour of the Admiral's Daughter, in whose House he was confin'd, and the conceiv'd so great an Affection for him, that Gilbert having at last made his Escape, she travell'd to London on purpose to meet him; was baptiz'd there, and afterwards marry'd to Gilbert, by whom she had our Thomas, who was born A. D. 1119. Before his Birth, Gilbert return'd to the Holy Land, where he continu'd three Years and a half, having left his Wife in England: This Gentlewoman took great care of the Education of her Son, who in the very first blooming of his Youth, shew'd the marks of what might be expected from him in a riper Age. He began his Studies at London, and after having lost both his Father and Mother, compleated them at Paris. Upon his return to England, he was employ'd in the management of Affairs, and put himself into the Service of Theobald Arch-bishop of Canterbury. At that time, Henry Bishop of Winchester, Brother to King Stephen, was Legate in England, who abus'd his Quality and Authority, treating the other Bishops, and even his Metropolitan, with intolerable Arrogancy. Thomas advis'd Theobald to shake off the Yoke, and was sent by him to Pope Celestin II. to obtain a Revocation of Henry's Commission; inso-much, that being arriv'd at Rome, he negotiated that Affair so successfully, that the Pope depriv'd Henry of his Dignity, and conferr'd it on the Arch-bishop of Canterbury. Thomas was no sooner return'd to England, but Theobald entrusted him with the management of the Affairs of his Church, made him Arch-deacon of it some time after, and bestow'd on him many Benefices. Afterwards King Stephen dying, and Henry II. Duke of Normandy succeeding him, Thomas was constituted Chancellor of England, A. D. 1158. and obtain'd the Administration of the publick Affairs of the whole Kingdom.

Election of Thomas Arch-bishop of Canterbury.
At last he was nominated by the King to the Arch-bishoprick of Canterbury in 1161. after the Death of Theobald, and was ordain'd on Whit-sunday in the same Year. This Prelate was no sooner advanc'd to that high Station, but he vigorously apply'd himself to the maintaining of the Interests and Liberties of the Church. In the beginning of his Government, he found means to wrest the Ecclesiastical Revenues out of the Hands of the Noble-men who had usurp'd them, and persuaded the King to fill up the Episcopal Sees of Hereford and Worcester, which had been vacant for a long time. But it was difficult for him who had undertaken to maintain the Rights of the Church, to avoid falling out with his Prince about particular Interests; upon which account, he was oblig'd to resign the Office of Chancellor. After that step, he made a demand again, with much resolution, of the Revenues and Rights which he pretended pretended to belong to the Church of Canterbury, and which were in the possession of the King and of the Nobility : He vehemently oppos'd the Outrages and Exactions, with which the great Lords were wont to oppress the People and the Clergy : He endeavour'd to abolish the Custom that was introduc'd in England, of adjudging to Princes the Revenues of vacant Churches, and of deferring to supply those Churches with Ministers, in order to enjoy them longer ; and he asserted, That Clergy-men, guilty of Misdemeanours, were not under the Jurisdiction of Civil Magistrates ; but that they ought to be brought before the Bishop, to be degraded and condemned to Ecclesiastical Penalties, without delivering them up to the Secular Power ; nevertheless, if in process of time they committed new Crimes, the Temporal Justice might then apprehend them, because they were no longer to be look'd upon as Clergymen.

The obstinate defence of the last Article, chiefly caus'd Thomas to incur the King's displeasure, and gave occasion to the Quarrel : For a Canon of Bedford nam'd Philip Brock having abus'd one of the King's Officers, before whom he was summon'd, that Prince determin'd to bring him to condign Punishment. The Arch-bishop suspended the Canon from his Ecclesiastical Functions and Benefice for several Years, but the King not being satisfied with those proceedings, requir'd that he might be put into the Hands of the Secular Justice : Upon the Arch-bishop's refusal to do it, the King held an Assembly of the Bishops of his Kingdom, in the Abbey of Wolminster ; where he made a Remonstrance, that it was expedient for the public Benefit, that Clergy-men should be try'd by the Civil Magistrates and condemned to afflictive Punishments, by reason that the scandal of Degradation did not at all move those, whom the Sanctity of their Function could not restrain from the committing of Crimes. Thomas, who was at the Head of that Assembly, after having debated with the other Bishops, reply'd to the King, That the Bishops could not relinquish a Right, which was granted to them by Henry I. his Grand-Father, and confirm'd by the solemn promise of King Stephen ; and that they entreated his Majesty to call to Mind the Oath that he took on the Day of his Coronation, to maintain the Church in its Liberty and Rights. Whereupon the King demanded whether they were disposed to observe the Customs and Constitutions of his Kingdom ? Thomas reply'd, that they were ready to do it, provided their Rights were secur'd, Salvo Ordine Suo, and all the Prelates made the same Answer, except the Bishop of Chichester nam'd Henry, who chang'd the last Words, and said, that he would punctually observe those Customs.

King Henry, was extremely incens'd at the restriction they put on their Promise, after he had so often press'd them to no purpose, to engage absolutely to observe the Customs of the Kingdom without any limitation, and left the Assembly, quite transported with Anger. The next Day, he sent to demand of the Arch-bishop of Canterbury, the Grants for all the Governments that were conferr'd on him, whilst he was Chancellor of England, and speedily departed from London, shewing evident marks of his high displeasure against the Bishops. Inasmuch that their dread of his Anger and of the ill effects that it might produce, and the solicitations which that Prince caus'd to be made, induc'd many of them to yield to give satisfaction to his Majesty, and these us'd their utmost endeavours to bring the others to the same Temper. Thomas stood to his Resolution for a long time, but being at last overcome by the frequent and pressing entreaties of the Prelates and of his best Friends, he suffer'd himself to be prevail'd upon ; went to meet the King at Oxford, and promis'd to observe the Customs of the Kingdom for the future, without any manner of Restriction.

The King to render this Declaration more Authentick, call'd an Assembly of the Bishops and Noble-men of the Kingdom at Clarendon, A. D. 1164. in which he oblig'd the Arch-bishop of Canterbury and the other Prelates to take an Oath, that they would carefully observe the Customs of the Kingdom, and at the same time, caus'd a verbal Process to be drawn up containing the Articles of those Customs that were to be acknowledg'd by the Bishops, and which were sixteen in Number. The First imports, That when any Contests arise between the Laity and Clergy, about the presentation to Benefices, they ought to be regulated in the King's Court : The Second, That the Revenues of Mannors depending on the King's Demesns cannot be made over to Churches, without his Majesty's Concession : The Third, That the Clergy-men accused or impeached by the King's Officers, shall be oblig'd to repair to his Court, to the end that enquiry may be made, whether they ought to be tried there, or whether they ought to be sent back to the Ecclesiastical Courts of Judicature ; and that being thus sent back, the King's Chief Justice, shall depu'te a Person to be Witness of the Proceedings of that Court : That if the Clergy-man be convicted, or confess his Crime, the Church cannot have a Right any longer to protect him. The fourth Article declares, That the Arch-bishops, Bishops, and the King's other Subjects cannot depart the Kingdom, without his Majesty's leave, and in case it be granted, they shall give him good assurance, that they will not act contrary to his Interest : The Fifth, That excommunicated Persons shall not be obliged to give security, for their continuing in the Country, but only to stand to the Judgment of the Church, when it shall be thought fit to grant them Absolution : The Sixth, That no other Informers or Witnesses shall be admitted against Laicks, but such as are allow'd by the Laws. The Seventh, That all those who hold any Lands of the King, or are of the number of his Officers, cannot be excommunicated, nor their Territories suspended from Divine Service, unless due notice be first given to the King or to his Chief Justice, to the end that that which belongs to the Jurisdiction of the King's Court, may be tried there, and that which ought to be tryed in the Ecclesiastical, may be refer'd to it: The Eighth, That an Appeal may be brought from the Arch-deacon's Court to the Bishop's, and from the latter to that of the Arch-bishop, and if the Arch-bishop has not done Justice, application may be made to the King, to the end that the Cause may be decided in the Arch-bishop's Court, without liberty to enter an Appeal, unless by his Majesty's special allowance: The Ninth, That in case a Contest arise, between a Clerk and a Lay-man, about an Estate, which one asserts to depend on the Church and the other on a temporal Lordship, the Chief Justice shall send for twelve Assistants, to examine to what Jurisdiction it ought to be appropriated; that if they judge it to belong to the Church, the Cause shall be tried in the Ecclesiastical Court, but if they find it to belong to the Lay-Fee, it shall be refer'd to the cognizance of the Lord of the Mannor. The Tenth, That if any Person be cited by his Arch-deacon or his Bishop to answer to an Accusation, and he refuse to appear, he may be suspended, but cannot be excommunicated, till the Chief Justice of the Place has summon'd him to make his appearance; and that if that Judge should neglect to do his Duty, the King shall take the matter in Hand: The Eleventh does not relate to Ecclesiastical Affairs: The Twelfth ordains, That the King shall enjoy the Revenues of the Arch-bishopricks, Bishopricks, Abbeys and Priories during a Vacancy; that to fill it up the King shall issue out a Conge d'Elire to the most eminent Men of the Place, who shall carry on the Election in his Chappel, with the King's Consent, and by the Advice of the Lords, who shall be conven'd for that purpose, and that the Person elected shall do Homage to the King before he be ordain'd: The Thirteenth Article imports, That the King shall cause Justice to be done to the Bishops, and the Bishops to the King: The Fourteenth, That Cattel seiz'd on for a Trespas shall not be detain'd by the Clergy, but put into the Custody of the Officers of the Royal Court: The Fifteenth, That Courts of Judicature shall be kept by the King's Justices: The Sixteenth, That the Sons of the Peasants shall not be ordain'd, but with the Consent of their Lords. These Articles were not sign'd by the Bishops, but were acknowledg'd in the Assembly, and three Copies of them were taken, viz. one for the King, the Second for the Arch-bishop of Canterbury, and the Third for the Arch-bishop of York.

The Arch-bishop of Canterbury repents of having sign'd the Articles.

The Arch-bishop of Canterbury being retir'd, his Friends and Domesticks began to murmur: Some of them excus'd him, in regard that he could not act otherwise, by reason of so unhappy a Conjunction of Affairs, and others complain'd on the contrary, That all the Immunities of the Church of England were ruin'd by that compliance. His Cross-bearer who was more bold than the rest, presum'd to make a remonstrance to that effect, and the Arch-bishop being perswaded that he had done ill, was affected with a sensible grief, took a resolution to do Penance, and abstain'd from celebrating Divine Service, till Pope Alexander III. who then resided at Sens, wrote to him not to do it any longer, and gave him Absolution for the Offence he might have committed, upon condition that he should confess it to a Priest.

As soon as the King understood, that the Arch-bishop repented of what he had done, he fell into a strange Passion against him. In the mean while Thomas being inform'd thereof, retir'd to his Abbey of Alinere situated near the Sea-shore, and embark'd twice to pass over into France; but the Wind continuing contrary, he return'd to Canterbury, and presum'd even to present himself before the King, by whom, he was very ill treated. At last that Prince despairing to bring over the Arch-bishop to his Interest, made application to the Pope, to compass his Design; to which purpose, he sent the Bishop of Lisieux and the Arch-deacon of Poitiers to prevail with him to constitute the Arch-bishop of York his Legate in England, and to order Thomas and the other Prelates to observe the Customs of his Kingdom. The Pope having refus'd to do both, the King sent new Deputies to demand the same thing again with greater importunity, and to entreat him to confirm the Customs and Privileges of his Kingdom, by the authority of the Holy See. The Pope absolutely deny'd the latter request, but to amuse him, he conferr'd the Dignity of Legate on the Arch-bishop of York, nevertheless upon condition, that he should not have any jurisdiction over the Person or Arch-bishoprick of Thomas, and without exempting the Bishops of England from the Obedience they ow'd to their Primate. Forasmuch as this Restriction render'd the authority of the Arch-bishop of York useless with respect to the King's design, which was to depose Thomas, he sent back the Letter to the Pope, with indignation.

Negotiations between the King and the Pope.

The Pope wrote another Letter to divert him from making any further attempts on the Rights of the Churches of his Kingdom; but that Prince instead of submitting to his Admonitions, caus'd the Arch-bishop of Canterbury to be summon'd to appear in Person before his Majesty, to answer to divers Informations that were brought against him. Thomas on the other side, entreated the King not to take it ill, that he stood to the Privileges of his Dignity, which exempted him from appearing before Secular Judges. The King being much more exasperated by that excuse, gave Orders to the Bishops and Temporal Lords of his Kingdom to meet together in his Royal Castle at Northampton, and compell'd the Arch-bishop of Canterbury to repair thither in quality of a Criminal rather than of a Judge. The First thing done in the Assembly, was to pronounce Sentence against him for neglecting to make a personal sonal appearance, when he receiv'd a Summons from the King, and his Estate, Goods and Chattels were Confiscated, upon condition nevertheless, that the execution of that Sentence should depend on his Majesty's pleasure. Afterwards he was convey'd into one of the Halls of the Court, where he being lock'd in, an Account was demanded of him of the Revenues of the vacant Bishopricks and Abbeys, that he had enjoy'd for several years, when he was Chancellor. He reply'd, That he would take advice about the matter. Henry Bishop of Winchester said, that he remember'd, that when Thomas Becket was chosen Arch-bishop, he had a general Discharge. Gilbert Bishop of London propos'd that he should resign his Arch-bishoprick to appease the King's Anger, and the other Prelates, except the Bishop of Winchester, were of the same Opinion. Thomas would not hearken to that proposal, but to be set at Liberty, he express'd his desire to speak with two Lords, who were with the King; when they were come, he desir'd that he might be allow'd time till the next day, and said, that then he would make such an Answer as God should direct him. Whereupon the Assembly deputed the Bishops of London and Recheſter to deliver that Message to the King; but the former said, that the Arch-bishop was desirous to have time, in order to look over his Papers, and to prepare to give an account to his Majesty. The King being satisfy'd with that Declaration, sent him word by the two Lords, with whom he desir'd to speak, That he was willing to grant him the time he sued for, provided that he kept his word, in giving an account of the things that were committed to his Charge. Thomas forthwith declar'd that he never made such a promise: However, he was permitted to depart, and that very Night he was seiz'd with a violent fit of the Colick, which hindred him from rising the next Morning.

The King sent two Lords of his Court to enquire whether he were Sick, and at the same time to give him a Summons. He excus'd himself for the present, by reason of his Indisposition, of which they were Witnesses, and promis'd to appear the next day. In the mean while a report was spread abroad, that if he went to the Royal Palace, he would be Assassinated or arrested, the next day several Bishops us'd their utmost endeavours to perswade him to make a resignation of his Arch-bishoprick and of all his Possessions to the King, in regard that they were much afraid lest he should lose his Life if he did not submit. He did not seem to be at all concern'd at their Remonstrance, but forbid all the Bishops to assist at the Proceedings that were to be carried on against him, and declar'd that he appeal'd to the Holy See. The Bishop of London protested against the Prohibition he then made, and retir'd with all the Bishops, except those of Winchester and Salisbury, who continu'd with Thomas Becket. However that Prelate after having Celebrated Mass went to the Palace, bearing his Crozier Staff himself. The King refus'd to admit him into his Presence, and retiring into a private Chamber, sent for the other Bishops, and made great complaints to them against Thomas Becket. The Bishops approv'd the King's Resentments, avouching that that Arch-bishop was a perjur'd Traitor, and that it was requisite to proceed against him as guilty of High Treason. However they durst not bring him to a Formal Tryal, but only sent him word by Hilary Bishop of Chicheſter, That forasmuch as after having promis'd Obedience to the King, and Sworn to observe the Customs of the Kingdom, he acted contrary to his Oath, they did not take themselves to be any longer obliged to obey him, that therefore they put their Persons and Churches under the Popes Protection, and cited him to his Tribunal.

The King likewise sent him word by Robert Earl of Leicester, that he expected an account of the Things committed to his Charge. Thomas protested that he was discharg'd by the King's Son, when he was made Arch-bishop of Canterbury. Afterwards he refus'd to submit to the Judgment of the King, Bishops and other Lords of the Kingdom; declar'd that he would acknowledge no other Judge but the Pope; and cited the Bishops before him. After having made this Declaration, he went out of the Palace, the Doors of which he open'd, with the Keys that were found hanging on the Wall, and was accompanied to his House by a crowd of poor People. On that very Night he took a resolution to retire, and to the end that it might be done more secretly, he feign'd an inclination to lie in the Church, and made his escape, having chang'd his Cloaths and Name, but before he embark'd he took some turns about the Coasts of England to avoid being apprehended: Then he pass'd over into Flanders, arriv'd at Graveline, and retir'd from thence to the Abby of St. Bertin, where he discover'd himself and sent Deputies to Lewis VII. King of France, to inform him of his present distress, and to entreat his Majesty to permit him to stay in his Kingdom. They were prevented by the Deputies of the King of England; but the French King did not receive them favourably, and declar'd on behalf of Thomas Becket even before the arrival of his Deputies. These last were kindly entertain'd, and the King promis'd all manner of Protection to the Arch-bishop, in his Kingdom, and said that in that Point, he only follow'd the Custom of the Kings his Predecessors, who by a very peculiar Privilege, were always in a capacity to afford a Sanctuary in their Dominions, to Persecuted Bishops, and to defend them against all their Enemies.

The Deputies of the King of England, and those of the Arch-bishop, went to the Pope, who was then at Sens; The former brought over some of the Cardinals to their side, but the Pope stood for the Arch-bishop, nevertheless he gave Audience to the Deputies of the King of England, who press'd him to oblige the Arch-bishop to return to England, and entreated him to send a Legate a latere to take cognizance of that Affair, and to accommodate it, or to determine it without Appeal. The Pope refus'd to do any thing till the Arch-bishop arriv'd in Person; and having declar'd his resolution to the Deputies, they departed very much dissatisfy'd. A little after, Thomas Becket accompanied by the Arch-bishop of Trier, and the Abbot of Beithin came to Soissons, where King Lewis admitted him into his Presence, and reiterated the promises he had made to his Deputies. Afterwards he went to Sens to meet the Pope, whom he soon made sensible of the Justice of his Cause, by shewing him the Articles that were drawn up at Clarendon, which with common consent were found contrary to the Interest and Liberty of the Church. The next day, he proffer'd to quit his Metropolitcal Dignity, and entreated his Holiness to nominate another Person to supply his place. But the Pope would by no means allow it, order'd him to keep his Arch-bishoprick, and recommended him to the Abbot of Pontigny, into whose Monastery he retir'd.

The King of England being informed of the Pope's Answer by his Deputies, confiscated the whole Estate and Goods of the Arch-bishop of Canterbury, with those of his Relations and Friends; banish'd them from his Kingdom, and publish'd new Ordinances more prejudicial to the Liberty of the Church, than the former. Thomas Becket wrote to him, as also to some Bishops of England about that Matter; but those Remonstrances prov'd ineffectual. However he propos'd a Conference in which the Pope was to assist; but his Holiness being return'd to Rome, the King sent Deputies to him, whom he caus'd to pass through Germany, where they assisted in the Assembly of Wurtzburg against Pope Alexander, and bound themselves by an Oath, with the Bishops of Germany, to stand for Paschal the Antipope; nevertheless they did not forbear to continue their Journey, and to meet Alexander, to whom they deliver'd the Letter of their Prince, who threaten'd to withdraw himself from his Obedience, if he did not give him satisfaction as to the affair of Thomas Becket.

Thomas Becket made Legate of the Holy See in England.

The Pope to advance a Person, whom the King thought fit to deprecate, constituted him Legate of the Holy See throughout the whole Kingdom of England, except the Province of York. Thomas being Invested with this new Dignity, thought himself obliged to shew the effects of it. Therefore he condemn'd and abolish'd the Customs, that were publish'd at Clarendon; Excommunicated all those who observ'd 'em, or caus'd 'em to be observ'd by others; sent word to the Bishops, that they were by no means oblig'd to the Oath they had taken, and threaten'd the King of England with an Anathema. On the other side, the King to prevent him, appeal'd to the Holy See, by the advice of the Prelates of Normandy, and dispatch'd John of Oxford to Rome, to entreat the Pope to send a Legate a latere into England, to the end that they might determine or make up the Business. However, he threatn'd the Monks of Cîteaux to destroy all the Monasteries that they had in his Dominions, if they entertain'd the Arch-bishop any longer at Pontigny. Therefore he was forc'd to depart from thence and made choice of the Monastery of St. Columba in the City of Sens for the place of his abode. He Excommunicated many Persons of the Kingdom of England and some Bishops, more especially the Bishop of London his greatest Enemy.

John of Oxford's Negotiation at Rome.

In the mean while John of Oxford having gain'd the favour of part of the Court of Rome, by his Presents, assur'd the Pope, That the King of England, would no longer insist upon the Customs that he caus'd to be receiv'd in the Assembly of Clarendon, and procur'd William Cardinal Bishop of Pavia, to be nominated Legate, to determine the Affair of the Arch-bishop of Canterbury; but in regard, that he might be surpriz'd, by reason of the intimate Correspondence that there was between him and the King of England, the Pope appointed Cardinal Orto to be his Collegue. He also gave Absolution in particular to John of Oxford, whom Thomas Becket had Excommunicated, granted him the Deanry of Salisbury, and Suspended Thomas's Authority, till the arrival of his Legates. These advantages, which it seems, the King of England obtain'd at the Court of Rome, startled the Arch-bishop of Canterbury and his Friends; insomuch that Peter Lombard wrote about it to the Pope, as well as Thomas Becket, who excepted against the Judgment of the Cardinal of Pavia. These two Legates being arriv'd in France, inform'd the Arch-bishop of the occasion of their being sent by the Pope, and the Cardinal of Pavia told him, that he came to put an end to the Difference between him and the King of England. Thomas had prepar'd a very sharp Answer, but he suppress'd it by the advice of William of Salisbury, and wrote to him with greater Moderation.

The Negotiations of the Pope's Legates in England.

The two Legates could not immediately execute their Commission, by reason that they were oblig'd to mediate a Peace between the Kings of England and France. The Cardinal of Pavia openly maintain'd the Interest of the former, and gave occasion of complaint to the Legates in other; nay the Pope upon his sollicitation, prohibited Thomas to pronounce any Sentence of Excommunication against the Person of the King of England, or of Suspension against his Dominions. At last the Legates gave notice to the Arch-bishop, to make his appearance on Novemb. 10th. A. D. 1168. on the Frontiers of the two Kingdoms; but he desir'd and obtain'd a delay for seven days, to get together again the Companions of his Exile. At last he appear'd with a numerous retinue at Gisors, the place appointed for the Conference, and there met with the two Legates, accompanied by the Arch-bishop of Rouen, who represented to him the inflexibility of the King of England, and the Calamities that the Church endur'd by the the Persecution, of which he was the Cause. Afterwards they insisted upon the Grandeur and Power of that Prince, the Kindness and Respect that he always express'd for the Holy See, and the extraordinary Favours that he had Confer'd on the Arch-bishop of Canterbury: They related with exaggeration the complaints that he made against him, accusing him of having induc'd the King of France and the Count of Flanders to make War with his Majesty. Lastly they exhorted the Arch-bishop to humble himself, and to testify his Obedience to his Sovereign, by making a voluntary submission, and by suppressing his Anger, and the fierceness of his natural Disposition.

Thomas Becket resolutely made his defence, and clear'd himself from the suspicions, that the King of England had conceiv'd against him, and more especially, as to the particular accusation, that he had excited the War between that Prince and the King of France, who condescended so far as to give Testimony to his Innocence, by declaring upon Oath, that it was not true, that he solicited him to undertake that War. The Arch-bishop of Canterbury added that he was well persuaded, that a Bishop ought not to have recourse to those sorts of means; That he was ready to shew to the King all manner of submission and deference, provided that the Glory of God, the Honour of the Apostolick See, the Liberty of the Church, the Dignity of the Priesthood, and the Church-Revenues might receive no detriment. They propos'd that he should promise the King to observe all the Customs that were in use, in the time of the Arch-bishops his Predecessors, or at least that he should tolerate them, and conceal his resentments: But he would not engage to do either, no not so much as to keep silence. Then they insisted that he should resign his Archbishoprick, in case the King could be prevail'd with, to renounce the Customs that were contested, but he likewise rejected that Proposal. Lastly the Legates asked him, whether he were willing to acknowledge them as competent Judges for the deciding of the Differences between him and the King or not. He was somewhat perplex'd at this Demand; for on the one side, he was unwilling openly to disown their Authority, and on the other side, he did not look upon it as safe, that he should be try'd in any other Tribunal but that of the Pope himself. Therefore he reply'd; That when the Goods and Charrels, of which he was depriv'd, were restor'd to him, he would readily submit to the Judgment of the Pope, or to that of any other Persons to whom he should grant a Commission to be his Judges. Thus ended this Conference, which had no effect.

Thomas Becket gave an account of all these particular Circumstances to the Pope in a Letter, and the two Legates went to Communicate them to the King of England: Whereupon that Prince and the Prelates of his Kingdom demanded of the Legates, whether they had not receiv'd Orders from the Pope to bring Thomas Becket to his Tryal, or whether they were not empower'd to do it, by virtue of their Office? They declar'd that they had no such Power; and that all that they could do, was only to cause the Pope's Letters to be read publicly; by which he prohibited the Arch-bishop of Canterbury, to Excommunicate the King, or to pass any Sentence of Suspension on his Kingdom; as also to inform him of the purport of them, with a prohibition to attempt any thing to the prejudice of that Order; and to confirm the Absolutions that were given to the Bishops, and other Excommunicated Persons, under pretence, that the Pope allow'd that such Absolution should be granted them, in case they were in danger of Death, and that those Persons being constrain'd by the King's Orders to pass over the Sea, ran the hazard of losing their Lives. But the Pope having permitted it only upon Condition, that they should restore the Church-Revenues, and the greatest part of them not having done it, Thomas Becket wrote to the Legates, that they ought to oblige them to make restitution, if they were desirous that their Absolution should be ratify'd. The Pope himself likewise wrote to the same effect; but the Cardinal of Pavia eluded that Order; alledging, that he could not put it in execution without offending the King.

In the mean while Thomas Becket made great complaints against those Proceedings, and sent word to the Court of Rome at the same time, entreating the Pope to recall those two Legates, who shewed too much partiality; inasmuch that his Holiness not being able to withstand the importunity, of those who adher'd to the Interest of that Arch-bishop at Rome, immediately sent for the Legates and depriv'd them of all manner of Authority. Cardinal Otho before his departure us'd his utmost endeavours to induce the King of England to do Justice to the Arch-bishop, whereupon his Majesty reply'd, that he would consent that that Prelate should return to Canterbury, and possess his Church in Peace, and that he for his part would renounce the Customs, that were not in use in the time of his Predecessors; but that he would not hear talk of doing him Justice, and those of his Party, as to the Estates they enjoy'd for a long time, pretending that they had put them to a good use. The Cardinal in like manner spoke to the King much to the same effect, but all their Remonstrances serv'd only to draw upon them the displeasure of that Prince, who complain'd when they came to take leave of him, that he was betray'd by the Pope and threatn'd to yield him Obedience no longer, if he did not take care to do him Justice with respect to the Arch-bishop of Canterbury.

After-
the King of England had received the Pope's Letters, he wrote to the King of France, and the Count of Flanders, to inform them of the same, and to request their assistance.

the King of France.

Afterwards, the King of France interceded at the solicitation of the Pope to accommodate that Business with the King of England, and procur'd an Interview, during which the Archbishop of Canterbury threw himself at King Henry's Feet, and after having implo'd his Clemency, declar'd that he would resign to him, every thing that had occasion'd the Differences between them, provided that the Glory of God might be indemnify'd. His Majesty receiv'd that Restriction, with a great deal of dissatisfaction, and propos'd to the King of France, that he would leave Thomas in the quiet possession of the See of Canterbury, saying, That he expected to enjoy'd the Rights that were enjoy'd by the King, his Predecessors in the time of the Predecessors of the Arch-bishop; who should likewise enjoy the Immunities that his Predecessors had actually enjoy'd. This proposal seem'd reasonable to the Assistants, and even to the King of France; nevertheless Thomas Becket, would not accept of it, alledging, that his Predecessors had Tolerated some Abuses, which his Adversaries would fain compel him to approve against his Conscience. This refusal caus'd a murmuring among the Lords of both Nations, and gave no manner of satisfaction to the two Kings. The Enemies of the Arch-bishop accus'd him of Arrogancy, and even many of his Friends did not approve his Inflexibility. However the King of France soon alter'd his Mind, commended the constancy of that Prelate, and instead of Banishing him out of his Dominions, as it was expected, he admitted him into his Presence, suffer'd him to reside at Sens, and continu'd to assist him. King Henry sent Envoys to complain to that Prince, that he treated a Rebel so kindly, who had refus'd to accept of Peace upon reasonable Terms; but perceiving that the French King, was resolv'd not to abandon him, he solicited the Pope again by two Deputations, and prevail'd with the King of Sicily, and the Estates of Italy to joyn their entreaties to his, against the Arch-bishop of Canterbury.

However all that could be obtain'd of the Pope, was, that he would send two other Legates to endeavour again to procure a Reconciliation between them. Gratian the Nephew of Pope Eugenius III and Vivian Advocate of the Church of Rome, were chosen for that purpose. The Pope deliver'd to them the Articles of the Agreement ready drawn up, and oblig'd them to take an Oath, not to go beyond the Orders he had given them. He prohibited them to receive any thing of the King of England, till the conclusion of the Treaty, and order'd them to declare to that Prince, that if he neglected to make Peace upon the Conditions prescribed by him, he would enjoin the Arch-bishop of Canterbury, to make use of the Authority of the Church against him. These Legates manag'd divers Negotiations in the Year 1169, but none of them took Effect. King Henry offer'd to permit Thomas Becket to return to England, and to re-establish him in his Arch-bishoprick, and in the possession of his Estate, but would have this Condition annexed, Provided always that the Rights of the Kingdom be maintain'd; but the Legates refus'd to admit that Clause, unless this were also insert'd Provided that the Liberties of the Church be not infringed. There was also an Interview at St. Denis between the two Kings, the Legates and the Arch-bishop which prov'd ineffectual, So that the Legates return'd without coming to any manner of Agreement. The King of England who was not well satisfy'd with these Legates, demanded others of the Pope, with much importunity, and even with Menaces. His Holiness was not of Opinion that his request ought to be deny'd; and even Suspended the Arch-bishop's Authority till the Differences were finally determin'd. He nominated Simon Prior of Mont Dieu and Bernard de Gorila, to be his Legates, on that occasion, and gave them two Letters for King Henry, viz. one full of Exhortations and gentle Admonitions, and the other of severe Reprimands and Threats, with Orders to deliver the former at first; and in case he obstinately persisted in his Resolution, to add the second. These two Legates conducted the Arch-bishop to the Place appointed for the Interview, where the two Kings were Present, and admonish'd him to humble himself before his Sovereign: He followed their Advice, and only insist'd that the Glory of God might be secur'd in these Terms, Ad honorem Dei. King Henry was offended at that Expression, and requir'd, That the Arch-bishop should promise and bind himself by Oath, as a Priest, and a Bishop in the presence of the whole Assembly, sincerely to observe the Customs, that were follow'd by the Reverend Arch-bishops, under the Kings his Predecessors, which he had also engag'd to do upon another occasion. The Arch-bishop promis'd to be faithful to him in every particular, as far as it was possible, Salvo ordine suo, and added, That for Peace sake, he would engage to observe, as far as his Dignity would allow, such Customs as were in use amongst his Reverend Predecessors. The King peremptorily insist'd, That he should promise to observe the Customs of his Kingdom, without any manner of Restriction; but the Arch-bishop would by no means consent to it, and upon that refusal his Majesty departed out of the Assembly. The Legates having exhorted him to re-admit the Arch-bishop to his Favour, and to Restore him to his Church, he reply'd, That perhaps he might one day be prevail'd upon to do the latter, but that he would take care never to make him his Confident. During a second interview between the two Princes, they presented to King Henry, the Pope's menacing Letter, but he was not at all concern'd at it, and always insist'd upon the Promise that the Arch-bishop of Canterbury had made to act conformably to the Customs of the Kingdom, which the Arch-bishops his Predecessors had observ'd before him: Thomas Becket made Answer, That he was ready to obey his Majesty, as far as it could be done, without infringing the Privileges

leges of his Dignity, and thus this Negotiation took no more effect than the others; in-much, that the Pope being wearied with the delays of the King of England, revok'd the Suspension of the Arch-bishop's Authority, and left him at liberty to act as he should think fit.

Some time after, King Henry designing to Crown his eldest Son, appointed the Arch-bishop of York to perform that Ceremony; but the Pope being inform'd of his Intention, prohibited that Arch-bishop and all others, under pain of Suspension, to make any attempt upon a Right that apparently belong'd to the Arch-bishop of Canterbury. Thomas Becket likewise, wrote to the Arch-bishop of York and to his Collegues to notify to them the same Prohibition; whereupon the King was so extremely incens'd, that he took a resolution to oblige his Subjects to take an Oath, That they would not obey the Pope, nor the Arch-bishop of Canterbury, and caus'd his Son to be actually Crown'd by the Arch-bishop of York at Westminster, in a Church belonging to the Jurisdiction of Canterbury. The young King in like manner took an Oath, to observe the Customs of the Kingdom, that were publish'd at Clarendon: In the mean while the Pope being press'd by the Remonstrances of the King of France, of the Arch-bishop of Canterbury, and of William Arch-bishop of Sens, declar'd the Arch-bishop of York suspended from all manner of Ecclesiastical Functions, and pronounc'd the same Sentence against all the Bishops who assist'd at that Ceremony. He sent word at the same time to Rotrou Arch-bishop of Rouen, and to Bertrand Bishop of Nevers to meet the King of England, in order to admonish him the last time in his Name to make Peace; and in case he refus'd to do it, to suspend all his Dominions from Divine Service, that were situated on the hither side, or beyond the Sea. At the same time, he dispatch'd a smart Reprimand to the King of England, requiring him in the Name of God, and by Virtue of the Apostolick Authority, to be reconciled with the Arch-bishop of Canterbury, and to give Peace to the Church, if he design'd to avoid an Anathema, like to that which was pronounc'd against the Emperor Frederick; inasmuch, that those urgent Threats oblig'd King Henry to berhink himself seriously of an Accommodation, and personally to entreat the Legates to use their utmost endeavours to procure it.

Whereupon Thomas Becket went to meet the King, accompanied with the Arch-bishop of Sens; and his Majesty receiv'd him with such particular Marks of Kindness, as he never shew'd him since their falling out. The Arch-bishop demanded Justice for the Indignities put upon the Church of Canterbury, and more especially for the injury he had lately done him, by the Coronation of his Son: The King promis'd to give Orders that that Prince should be Crown'd again, and then Thomas Becket caus'd Intercession to be made by the Arch-bishop of Sens (who began to speak,) that his Majesty would vouchsafe, to restore to him the Church of Canterbury, with all the Revenues belonging to it, and to do him Justice, as to what relates to the Coronation of the Prince his Son; he for his part, engaging at the same time, to yield to his Majesty, all the Respect, Obedience and Submission, that is due from an Arch-bishop to his Sovereign Prince, according to the Ordinance of God. The King accepted of those Terms, and thus the Peace was at last effectually concluded. Afterwards the Arch-bishop of Canterbury humbly entreated the King his Master, that he might have liberty to take leave of the King of France, to return Thanks for the many signal Favours he had receiv'd from him.
He also continu'd some time longer in France, with a design not to pass over into England, till he had receiv'd Information, that those Persons were actually put in Possession of the Revenues of the Church of Canterbury, whom he sent thither for that purpose. In the mean while, the Arch-bishop of York and the Bishops of London and Salisbury, us'd all possible means to break off the Agreement, and further, to incense King Henry against the Arch-bishop. At that time, one Renulphus, who was the Minister of the Arch-bishop of York's Fury, made no difficulty to pillage the Revenues of the Church of Canterbury; but neither that Injury nor the Coldness with which the King then treated Thomas Becket, were sufficient to divert him from the resolution he had taken to return to England, notwithstanding the Advice of his Friends to the contrary, and the Threats of his Enemies.

Therefore he embark'd at Calice in the end of the Year 1170. and arriv'd at Sandwich; but Thomas before his departure, he sent into England, the Letter that the Pope had directed to him Becket's and which he kept till that time. By virtue of that Letter, his Holiness suspended the Archbishop of York with the Bishops, who assist'd at the Coronation of the young King, and excommunicated or suspended for divers Causes, a great part of the Prelates of the Kingdom.
The publication of that Sentence extremely exasperated the Minds of the Prelates and English Nobility. The Arch-bishop upon his arrival, met with divers Persons who attempted to take away his Life; and he was no sooner at Canterbury, but some of the King's Officers ac-company'd with Renulphus and three Clergy-men, came (according to the Order they had re-ceiv'd from the Arch-bishop of York and two other Prelates) to require him in his Majesty's Name to absolve all the Bishops who were suspended or excommunicated; alledging, That what he had done against them, was prejudicial to the King himself, ruin'd the Customs of the Kingdom, and was contrary to the Tranquillity of the State. They promis'd at the same time, That when the Suffragan Bishops of the Metropolitane See of Canterbury were absolved, they would readily submit to his Injunctions, as far as they could do it, without impairing

the Dignity of the Crown. The Arch-bishop reply'd, That it did not lie in his power to repeal a Sentence pass'd by the Holy Apostolick See; but they persisted in pressing him more earnestly, and threaten'd that if he refus'd to do it, the King would revenge the Indignity on the whole Church. Thomas Becket proffer'd, That if the excommunicated or suspended Bishops would take an Oath in his presence, in due Form, to submit to what he should think fit to ordain, for the sake of Peace and upon account of the Respect that he bore to his Majesty, he would do all that he could in their favour. But they could by no means be persuaded to take such an Oath, without informing the King of its purport, nor to submit in such a manner to the Will and Pleasure of the Arch-bishop of Canterbury.

Then the three Prelates above-mention'd, went to meet the King, implor'd his Assistance, and represented to him, that the Arch-bishop of Canterbury had disturb'd the Peace of the Kingdom by his Arrival, openly accusing him of Arrogancy and Tyranny. The King being highly provoked by that Discourse, said in a Passion, That he was unfortunate in meeting with none that could take Vengeance of one single Prelate, who created him more Trouble, than all his other Subjects, and endeavour'd by all manner of Means to make void his Royal Authority. The letting fall of these Words, gave occasion to four of his Courtiers to form a Conspiracy against the Arch-bishop's Life: For they immediately set out, and being arriv'd in England, Becket, and shew'd him an Order from the King, to absolve the excommunicated or suspended Bishops, and to take an Oath of Allegiance. But the Arch-bishop having refus'd it, they took up Arms, enter'd the Cathedral Church of Canterbury, where he was officiating, and Assassinated him, at the Altar, one of the last days of the Year, 1170. which was the 52 of his Age, and the 9th since his promotion to the Metropolitan Dignity. As soon as the News of that base Act was brought to King Henry, he express'd a great deal of Trouble for his Death, and sent Deputies to Rome to assure the Pope, That he was by no means consenting to the Fact. The Pope was transported with Grief and Indignation; but the King's Deputies having depos'd upon Oath, that their Master was not at all accessory to that Murder, and that he was ready to clear himself by Oath; his Holiness contented himself only to excommunicate the Assassins and their Accomplices, and sent the Cardinals Theodin of St. Vitalis, and Albert of St. Laurence, to receive the King's Oath, and to oblige him to give Satisfaction to the Church.

These two Legates being arriv'd in Normandy, found the King altogether dispos'd to submit to every thing that the Church should enjoyn him. He took an Oath upon the Holy Gospels, That he neither commanded nor was desirous, that the Arch-bishop of Canterbury should be kill'd, and that he was more sensible of Grief at his Death, than at that of the King his Father; but he confess'd, that he had been in some Measure the cause of it, by reason of the Animosity which he so often express'd against his Person, and that therefore he was ready to undergo such Penance, as the Legates should think fit to impose on him. The two Cardinals order'd him, 1. To maintain 200 Soldiers during a whole Year, for the defence of the Holy Land. 2. To revoke all Customs and Ordinances introduc'd under his Reign to the prejudice of the Church, and to reform by the Pope's advice, such as were establish'd. 3. To restore to the Church of Canterbury all its Revenues and Territories, and to make the same restitution to all others that were pillaged. 4. and lastly, To deliver Spain from the Oppression of the Infidels, in case it were requir'd by his Holiness. They likewise privately enjoyn'd him, Fasting, Alms-giving and some other particular Penances. The King accepted of all those Conditions, with the Marks of an extraordinary Humility, and the Legates gave him Absolution at the Church-door. The young King took an Oath to observe the same things, obliging himself, that if his Father died without fulfilling his Penance, to perform, what was ordain'd, in his stead.

Afterwards Thomas Becket was canoniz'd for a Saint, A. D. 1173. and King Henry being attack'd by his unnatural Son, who rebell'd against him, implor'd his Assistance, going bare-footed to his Tomb, as it were an humble Suppliant.

There are still extant Six Books of the Letters of this Prelate, and of those that were written to him during his Troubles, which were collected by John of Salisbury, published by Christianus Lupus, and printed at Bruxels in Quarto, A. D. 1682. with a Relation of his Life, taken out of four contemporary Authors, viz. Herbert his Clerk, William of Canterbury, the Abbot Alanus and John of Salisbury. The Life and Actions of that famous Man, sufficiently shew his Character, viz. That he was resolute, of an undaunted Courage, and inflexible to the highest degree; and his Letters, that he was eloquent, had the Art of stirring up the Affections, and was endu'd with pious and generous Principles.

An Account of the Lives and Writings of the principal Authors who flourish'd in the Twelfth Century.

GEFFREY Abbot of VENDOME.

GEFFREY was a Native of Angers descended of a noble Family, was educated by Garnier Arch-deacon of that City, and enter'd very Young, into the Monastery of Vendome, which was founded A. D. 1050. by Godfrey Martel Count of Angers. A little while after, he was made Abbot in 1093. being as yet only a Deacon. Ives of Chartres gave him the Benediction, and exacted of him an acknowledgment, that he should be subject to the Jurisdiction of the Bishop of Chartres. However, that Abbot soon repented of what he had done, and caus'd himself to be freed from that engagement by the Pope; neither could his Successors be induc'd to renew it, because the Monastery of Vendome depended immediately on the Holy See. To discharge that Obligation to his Holiness, Geffrey took a Journey to Rome, the same Year that he was constituted Abbot, where he did Pope Urban II. a very notable piece of Service, in supplying him with means for the recovery of the Palace of Lazzeran, out of the Possession of Ferruchius, who kept it for Guibert the Antipope: He receiv'd the Order of Priesthood from the Hands of that Pope, who made him Cardinal of St. Prisca. Afterwards returning to France, in 1094. laden with Honour, he took upon him the Government of his Monastery of Vendome, and was employ'd in the Administration of the most important Affairs of the Church and State. He was invited by the Popes to divers Councils, and was chosen by Lewes the Gross King of France, to be Arbitrator of a Difference that arose between that Prince and the Count of Angers. He vigorously maintain'd the Interests of the See of Rome; pass'd over the Alps Twelve times for the Service of the Popes; was taken Thrice by his Enemies, and at last for his own part, was involv'd in many Law-suits, with Bishops, Abbots and secular Lords, about the Rights and Possessions of his Monastery, which he preserv'd entire, and even augmented considerably. 'Tis not precisely known in what Year he died, but he was still living in the time of Pope Honorius II. A. D. 1129.

*Geffrey
Vendome.*

The first Book of the Letters of this Abbot contain 31 directed to the Popes Urban II. Paschal II. Calixtus II. and to the Legates of the See of Rome. They are almost all written for the preservation of the Immunities and Possessions of his Abbey, demanding the Protection of it of the Popes, as a Right unquestionably belonging to him; in regard that all the Revenues of his Monastery by its Foundation, were an allodial Tenure of the Holy See, for which he paid a certain Duty.

In the second Book are compris'd 32 Letters directed to Ives Bishop of Chartres, and to Geffrey his Successor, in the greatest part of which he vindicates the exemption of his Monastery, avouching that it depends solely on the Holy See; that the Bishop of Chartres has no right either over their Persons or Possessions; that they are not to be look'd upon as † Acephala, † Destitute of a Head, because they have Jesus Christ for their Head, and after him the Pope; that the Promise he made to Ives Bishop of Chartres, was extorted by surprize, and afterwards declar'd null by Pope Urban. Some of those Letters relate to the Contests that he had with the Monks of Marmoutier, and the Countess of Vendome. In the Nineteenth, he discusses the Question concerning the Reiteration of Extreme Unction, and concludes with Ives of Chartres, that it ought not to be re-iterated, by reason that it is a Sacrament.

The Third Book comprehends 43 Letters written to several Bishops, more especially to those of Angers and Mans: Some of them purely relate to Morality, others to the Monastical Discipline, and many others to particular Affairs. 'Tis asserted therein that a Monk accused by his Abbot, ought not to be left to his arbitrary Proceedings. This Author likewise vigorously opposes the Investitures; shews that Bishops are forbidden to exact a yearly Salary, for the use of the Altars, which they grant to Monks; and lastly observes, that 'tis reasonable, that those Churches which have Possessions in the Territories of other Churches, should pay the Tithes of them to the latter.

The Fourth Book contains fifty Letters directed to Abbots or Monks, which for the most part relate either to Morality, or to particular Affairs; among which the 47th directed to Robert d' Arbrisselles has been much talk'd of. It is written to advertise that Abbot Founder of the Order of Fontevrault, that there was a report concerning him, about a Business, which did not tend to his Credit, and which he ought speedily to reform, if that report were really true, viz: That he convers'd so familiarly with Women, that he permitted them to co-habit with him; that he kept private Correspondence with them; and that he was not ashamed even to ly with them, under pretence of mortifying himself by enduring the Stings of the Flesh, which is a new kind of unheard of Martyrdom, but very dangerous, and of a very bad bad Example. We have also in our possession another Letter written by Marbodius Bishop of Reims, which passes the same Censure on Robert d' Arbriffelles. Indeed these two Letters plainly prove, that the Enemies of Robert had caus'd those false Reports to be spread abroad against him; but they are no proof that he was guilty of such enormities as were laid to his charge, and his Conduct is sufficiently justify'd, by the advantageous testimonies that are given of him by the Writers of that time, who look'd upon him as a Man of great Sanctity.

However, the Monks of Fontevrault imagin'd, that the better to vindicate the Memory of their Founder, it was requisite to call in question the truth of those two Monuments, and to make them pass for spurious Pieces. Father Mainserme has exhibit'ted this Charge against them in the Name of his Collegues, and has made it a part of the Subject of his Book call'd, The Buckler of the Order of Fontevrault. Amongst all the Conjectures alledged by him against Geffrey's Letter, there is only one direct, that deserves any consideration, viz. that Abaelard in one of his Letters, says that Roscelin, of whom we have made mention in the preceeding Century, wrote an invective Epistle against that excellent Preacher of Jesus Christ Robert d' Arbriffelles, whence Father Mainserme concludes it to be that of Geffrey, or that of Marbodius, or perhaps both; but he has mistaken Abaelard's meaning: For that Author does not say, that Roscelin compos'd one or two Letters under the Name of another Person, to declaim against Robert d' Arbriffelles, but that he wrote a Letter against him and St. Anselm, so that this has no relation to those of Geffrey and Marbodius. As for that of Geffrey now in Question, it cannot be denied but it belongs to him; for, 1. 'Tis apparently his Style, and if it be never so little compar'd with the others, we shall soon be periwaded, that it was written by the same Author. 2. It is not only extant in the Manuscript of Mans, which Father Sirmond made use of; but also in Two other Manuscripts, viz. one in the Library of Christina Queen of Sweden, and the other in that of Santa Croce at Florence, which are referr'd to the time of Robert d' Arbriffelles; Father Mabillon having also seen and cited the latter in the Relation of his Voyage to Italy.

In the fifth Book are contain'd 28 Letters directed to divers particular Persons, which are full of moral Discourses and Compliments. In the Sixteenth, he asserts the necessity of making Confession of all sorts of Sins; and in the last, he maintains, that a Man, who has once assum'd the Monastick Habit, and liv'd for some time in a Monastery, cannot return to a secular courle of Life, altho' he made no express Profession nor receiv'd the Benediction.

These Letters are follow'd by several Tracts about divers Ecclesiastical Affairs; the First of which is a Treatise of the Body and Blood of Jesus Christ, in which he endeavours to prove the changing of the Bread and Wine into our Saviour's Body and Blood in the Eucharist; so that after the Consecration, nothing remains of the matter or substance of the Bread and Wine, but only the outward appearances, and that 'tis really the very same Body of Jesus Christ, that was born of the Virgin Mary, and which suffer'd on the Cross. He adds, That the Wicked receive it in the Sacrament, but do not receive the Effects nor Graces of it, which are only bestow'd on those, who are in a state of Righteousness.

The Second is made about the Election of Bishops and against the Investitures: He maintains in the former, that as Baptism makes a Christian, so Election and Consecration constitute a Bishop; and as it is impossible to be a Christian without receiving Baptism, so it is likewise impossible to be a Bishop without Election and Consecration. That those two Qualifications are so absolutely necessary, that Consecration without Election, and Election without Consecration, are not sufficient to make a Bishop: That Consecration supposes a Canonical Election, and that whosoever receives it without being Canonically Chosen, is rather Cursed than Consecrated; by reason that nothing can disannul the Order of Election and Consecration establish'd by Jesus Christ, who himself chose and consecrated his Apostles: That the Clergy supply our Saviour's Place in the Election and the Bishops in the Consecration: That all the other Christians have a right to demand a Bishop, but they cannot Elect nor Consecrate him: That upon that account, all those who aspire to Ecclesiastical Preferments, by any other means, than Canonical Election, subvert the Order of the Church: That the Church of Rome cannot dispense with that Institution, or permit it to be done otherwise; because the Pope cannot do that, which St. Peter himself had no power to do. Now Jesus Christ only empower'd St. Peter to bind that which ought to be bound, and to loose that which was of necessity to be loosed, and not to loose that which ought to be bound, or to bind that which ought to be loosed; and when St. Peter was about to act otherwise, St. Paul tho' a Novice in the Faith, withstood him to the Face: Lastly, that the Church of Rome ought not to repeal the Laws establish'd in the Holy Scripture, but to maintain them, nor to make use of the Power given by Jesus Christ, according to a capricious Humour, but according to our Saviour's Tradition.

Afterwards he passes to the Investitures, and says, That to know the Doctrine of the Catholick and Apostolick Church, as to that Point, 'tis requisite only to peruse the first Article of the Council, held under Gregory VII. in which that Pope excommunicates and treats as Hereticks all those Clergy-men, who shall presume to receive the Investiture from the Hand of Laicks: That that sort of Heresy is a more heinous Crime than Simony, in regard that Simony is only practis'd in secret, but the Investitures are always made publicly: That the Apostles forbid Laicks to assume the Power of conferring Ecclesiastical Orders, and that therefore the Investiture, which is a Sacrament or sacred Sign, by which the Bishop is distinguished from other Men, and put in possession of the Government of the Church, ought not to be receiv'd from the Hands of Laicks, but from that of the Clerk, who perform'd the Consecration: And in fine, that Lay-men, who cannot administer the Sacraments of the Church, ought not to deliver the Ring and the Pastoral Staff, which are Sacraments, such as the Salt and Water, the Chrism and the Consecrated Oils, when they are Administer'd by those who have a rightful Power, and with the requisite Ceremonies.

Apostles

The Third Tract is written in like manner against the Investitures, in which he repeats the same Arguments, and concludes that they are to be reputed no less Heresie, than Simony.

He continues to handle the same Matter in the Fourth Tract, and proves that Kings cannot confer the Investiture even of spiritual Benefices, with the Ring and Staff; because it is an Ecclesiastical Ceremony, and that to speak properly they cannot bestow the Investiture of Ecclesiastical Possessions, by reason that they already belong to the Church. But he acknowledges that after a Canonical Election and Consecration, they may grant the Royal Investiture of Church Revenues, and put him that has the Title, in possession of them, affording him their Assistance and Protection, which may be done by certain outward Signs, that are not at all prejudicial to the Rights of the Church: And lastly that it is not expedient to Excommunicate Princes upon that account, in regard that such proceedings, would occasion a greater Mischief.

In the following Tract, he lays down a Principle, which also has relation to the business of Investitures, viz. That Condescension may be sometimes allow'd, and the granting of Dispenations; but 'tis requisite that it be done with a good intention for the Benefit of the Church, or in case of necessity, and not for Money or Favour; and that that which is absolutely evil, ought never to be tolerated or permitted.

In the Sixth, he maintains three Principles, viz. That the Church ought to be Catholick, Free and Chaste: That Quatenus Catholick, it can neither be Bought nor Sold; that as it's Free it ought not to be brought into Subjection to any Secular Power; and that as 'tis Chaste, it ought not to be corrupted with Presents.

The Seventh Tract contains certain Allegorical Explications of the Ark of the Covenant, and of the Tabernacle with reference to the Church.

In the Eighth, he explains, what are the effects of Baptism, Confirmation, Extreme Unction, and the Eucharist. He says, That Baptism remits Sins by the Vertue of the Holy Ghost, That in Confirmation the Holy Ghost is invoked that he would vouchsafe to take up his abode in the Habitation which he has Sanctified; that he would also Defend and Protect it: That that Sacrament is Administer'd by the Bishops to shew, that it gives the highest Perfection: That the Extreme Unction of Sick Persons confers on them Remission of Sins; to the end that Christians may obtain Mercy both in their Life time, and at the hour of Death: And lastly, That in the Communion of the Body and Blood of Jesus Christ the Christian Soul is Healed of all the Diseases of its Vices, re-establish'd in a State of Everlasting Salvation, and made one Body with Jesus Christ.

In the Ninth, he Treats of the re-iteration of the Sacraments, and says, That those are not reiterated; in which it seems, as if there were an intention to begin again that which was already done; but the same Ceremony may be re-iterated when 'tis perform'd for a different end, and has another effect: That therefore the Holy Chrism is put on the Fore-head, after having anointed the top of the Head with it; because those several Unctions produce different Effects: But that Extreme Unction cannot be re-iterated by reason that it is a Sacrament.

In the Tenth, he proves, That the Bishops ought not to exact any thing for Benedictions and Ordinations, and asserts it to be a kind of Simony in a Bishop, not only to receive Money for the Benediction of an Abbot, but also to exact of him an acknowledgment, by which he binds himself by promise to his Diocesan.

The Eleventh is a Constitution about the manner how Monks ought to proceed in accusing others, and in defending themselves in their Chapter.

In the Twelfth, he explains in a few words, three Vertues necessary for Pastors of the Church, viz. Justice, Discretion and Fore-sight.

The Thirteenth and Fourteenth, are certain Dialogues between God, who upbraids the Sinner with his Ingratitude, and the Sinner, who acknowledges his Offences, and implores the Mercy of God.

The Fifteenth and Sixteenth, are Prayers made by a Sinner to God, in which he humbly sues for his Mercy, and begs pardon for his Transgressions.

These Tracts are concluded with four Hymns or Proses, viz. one directed to the Virgin Mary, and the three others on the Repentance of Mary Magdalen.

All these Works are follow'd by eleven Sermons on the Nativity, Resurrection and Ascension of Jesus Christ; On the Purification and Festivals of the Virgin Mary; On Mary Magdalen, whom he confounds with the Sinner; On the penitent Thief; and on St. Benedict. These Sermons are dry and barren, containing nothing that is Eloquent; and indeed, generally speaking, all the Pieces of this Author are not written with much Elegancy or Politeneſs. However his Compoſitions are very natural, and his Explications eaſy and familiar. Father Sirmond cauſ'd them to be printed at Paris A. D. 1610. from two Manuſcript Copies, and annex'd Annotations on the Letters, which are very ſerviceable to make known the Perſons, and to illuſtrate many Hiſtorical Matters of Fact that are mentioned therein.

HILDEBERT

Biſhop of Mans, and afterwards Arch biſhop of Tours.

Hildebert
Biſhop of Mans.

HILDEBERT Born at Lavardin in the Dioceſs of Mans, of Parents of mean Condition, joyn'd the Study of the Liberal Sciences to that of Divinity, and was choſen Biſhop of Mans, A. D. 1098. His firſt Exerciſes of the Epiſcopal Functions were diſturb'd by the War that broke forth between William II. ſirnam'd Rufus King of England, and Helie Count of Mans, who being taken Priſoner by that Prince, the City of Mans fell into the Hands of Foulques Count of Angers. The King of England was Marching at the Head of an Army to take it, when the Biſhop and Inhabitants, fearing leſt the Count of Angers ſhould make an Agreement at their Coſt, Surrendred it to him, on Condition that their Count ſhould be ſet at Liberty. Afterwards the Count having got together ſome freſh Troops, re-enter'd the City of Mans, and Beſieg'd the Forts that were poſſeſs'd by King William's Forces; but he was repulſ'd, and the King remain'd Maſter of the City. Hildebert was accus'd of having been concern'd in that enterprize, and oblig'd to paſs over into England to clear himſelf. The King enjoin'd him to cauſe the Towers of his Church to be pull'd down, and Hildebert returning with that Order, found his Church laid waſte by the outrages that were committed againſt the Clergy, by the pillaging of its Revenues and the burning of the City. But the King of England dying a little while after, A. D. 1100. Count Helie re-took the City, granted a Compoſition to the King's Soldiers, who were in the Forts, and re-eſtabliſh'd Order and Peace in thoſe Parts. When Hildebert ſaw his Native Country reſtor'd to its former Tranquillity, he undertook a Journey to Rome, and went to viſit Pope Paschal II. by whom he was very kindly entertain'd and returned from Rome laden with Honours and Preferments. Some time after, he was apprehended at Nogent le Rotrou, where he went to bear the laſt Will and Teſtament of the Count of Rotrou, who was detain'd Priſoner at Mans. At laſt having procur'd his Liberty, he ſolemniz'd the Conſecration of the Cathedral Church of Mans newly re-built, and continu'd to Govern his Dioceſs in Peace, till the Year 1125. when he was tranſlated to the Arch-biſhoprick of Tours after the Death of Guillebert.

Hildebert, not long after his Promotion to that Dignity, fell out with Lewis the Groſs, King of France, having refus'd to diſpoſe of the Benefices belonging to that Church, more eſpecially the Deanry and Arch-Deaconry at the pleaſure of his Prince, who cauſ'd the Revenues to be ſeiz'd on, and prohibited him to enter his Dominions. The Perſon who was nominated Dean, was at variance with the Canons, who were maintain'd by the Court, which gave occaſion to diſturbances in the Church of Tours. At laſt theſe diſſenſions being appeas'd, he was reſtor'd to the King's Favour, and died, A. D. 1132, after having poſſeſs'd the Epiſcopal See of Mans 27 Years, and the Metropolitan of Tours, fix Years and as many Months.

The Letters of this Author are the moſt valuable Pieces amongſt his Works. They are written in a fine Epistolary Style, after a very Natural manner, and contain divers Important Points of Morality, Church-Diſcipline and Hiſtory. We ſhall here produce the Extracts of thoſe that Treat of theſe Matters, omitting the others which relate to meer Compliments, or to particular Affairs, ſuch as the fix firſt.

Therefore we ſhall begin with the ſeventh, in which the Author determines, That a Virgin Betroathed before ſhe was Marriageable, whoſe Husband died without knowing her Carnally, cannot Marry the Brother of her former Husband; becauſe Marriage does not conſiſt in Carnal Copulation, but in the conſent of the Parties. The ſeventeenth is likewiſe written on the ſame Subject.

In the Ninth, he declares, That he refus'd to aſſiſt at the Conſecration of one who was choſen Biſhop of Angers; becauſe he was a Young Man, and not as yet in Orders, and was not Canonically Elected by the Clergy, but proclaim'd in a Popular Tumult, againſt whoſe Election, the Dean, the Chanter, the Arch-Deacons, and the greateſt part of the Chapter had proteſted. He declares the ſame thing to that Elected Perſon in the Twelfth and Thirtieth Letter, and exhorts him not to ſuffer himſelf to be Conſecrated.

By the Fourteenth, he depoſes a certain Perſon, who had given Money, to be Ordain'd a Deacon.

The Eighteenth, is a Letter directed to Paschal II. and Compos'd with a great deal of Art, to excuſe the Canons of St. Martin at Tours, who had given offence to the Pope, by inſiſting too much on their Privileges.

In the Nineteenth, he excuses himself for not being able to be present in a certain Council, by reason that his Church and City were pillag'd and oppress'd by the Tyranny of the Councils; alledging also, that he was oblig'd to pass over into England, to give an Account why he refus'd to demolish the Towers of his Church; and that he was ready to undertake another Voyage to Rome, which would put him out of a Capacity of defraying the Charges, that were requisite for a Journey to the Council.

In the Twenty first, he entreats a certain Bishop of England to furnish him with St. Anselm's Disputation against the Greeks in the Council of Bari concerning the Procession of the Holy Ghost, and returns thanks to that Prelate, in the following Letter, for sending it to him.

In the Twenty third, he intercedes with an Abbot, in behalf of a Monk who return'd to his Monastery, after he had left it, to treat him favourably.

In the Thirtieth, he sharply reproves a Priest, who caus'd a Person to be put to the Rack, whom he suspected to have committed a Robbery.

In the Thirty first, he gives excellent Instructions to a Lady who had forsaken the Vanities of the World, and in the Thirty Third, he reprehends a certain Rich Lord for his Pride and Covetousness.

In the Thirty fourth, he declares that he refus'd to approve the intended Marriage of a Count with one of his Kins-women; altho' it might put an end to a War that was carry'd on between him and his future Father-in-Law.

In the Thirty sixth, he represents to a Christian Virgin the advantages of a single Life, and gives her wholesome Advice, more especially relating to the Vertue of Humility.

In the Thirty Seventh, he comforts a certain Person, who was much troubled, in regard that he was diverted from the Contemplative Life, to take upon him the Pastoral Charge, and shews, by Examples taken out of Holy Scriptures, that it is profitable to joyn the Active to the Contemplative Life.

In the Thirty eighth, he acquaints the Bishop of Angouleme the Pope's Legate, with the Irregularities of the Monks of St. Evron, to the end that he might send him Word, after what manner he ought to proceed against them.

The Thirty ninth, is a Circular Letter written to the Bishops and Priests, and in general to all Christians concerning his Imprisonment. He was sent for by the Count of Rotrou, who was then a Prisoner; and having receiv'd his Confession, with his last Will and Testament by which that Noble-man bequeath'd his Estate to the Church, carry'd that Will to his Mother, who gave him good Entertainment. But the next day, Hildebert himself was taken Prisoner by Count Hubert Chancellor of Rotrou, who detain'd him, notwithstanding the entreaties of the Inhabitants of the Country and the Sentence of Excommunication publish'd by the Bishop of Chartres, and would not release him till he paid his Ransom. He declares that such an Act is unworthy of a Bishop, and that he chose rather to lose his Life, than to redeem it with Money.

In the Fortieth, he exhorts Serlo Bishop of Seez to Excommunicate Hubert, who kept him in Prison.

The Forty first contains wholesome Instructions to a Young Widow, who after having lead a disorderly Life for some time, devoted her self to God. He furnishes her with proper Remedies against Temptations.

In the Forty second, he advertises a Bishop, that Lisard ought not to be Excommunicated for committing Sacrilege and a Rape; since the Virgin whom he took to Wife, was only put into a Monastery, to be Instructed, and in regard that she left it to Marry him, by the Order of her Mother and Aunt.

In the Forty fourth, he determines, that a Priest, who offer'd the Sacrifice of the Mass, with ordinary Bread, having no other at Hand, ought to be punish'd, rather upon the scandal he had given, than for the Fault, which was not great.

In the Forty ninth, he commends the Action of a Bishop, who had hinder'd the removing of certain Persons out of the Church, who had taken Sanctuary therein.

The Fifty first, is a large Confutation of a certain Person, who reviv'd the Error of Vigilantius, and maintain'd, that the Invocation of Saints was unprofitable, because they do not hear our Prayers, and have no knowledge of Transactions on Earth. This Man gave it out, that Hildebert was of his mind; which oblig'd him not only to disown that Opinion, but also to shew, by the Testimony of the Fathers, that the Saints hear our Prayers, and that they make Intercession for us with God.

In the Fifty third, he excuses himself to Clarembaldus Canon of Oxford, for not having sent to him sooner, the History of the Miracles which happen'd in that City, because they had slip't out of his Mind: He gives him to understand, That the second Memorandum, which he directed to him, contain'd some of the same Miracles, with different Circumstances; but nevertheless, he did not judge it expedient to alter his first Relation, yet he left him at liberty, either to correct or to suppress it according to his Discretion.

In the Fifty fifth, he congratulates the Bishop of Clement, for bestowing an Arch-deaconry, on one of the Sub-deacons of the Church of Mans, a Person very worthy to be promoted to that Dignity, upon account of his Learning and Virtue; and declaims against the Custom that was introduced to retain Spiritual Livings in a Family, as it were by right of Succession; citing divers Passages against that Abuse.

The Fifty sixth, is a consolatory Letter to a King, upon occasion of the Death of his Son. It contains divers excellent Moral and Christian Maxims, touching the Constancy, with which Wife and Christian People ought to bear Afflictions.

In the Fifty ninth, he dissuades a certain Count, from undertaking a Voyage to St. James of Compostella, because his Duty oblig'd him to continue in the Country, where his Presence was necessary.

In the Sixtieth, he writes to the Bishop of Chartres, with reference to a Priest, who having been attack'd by a Robber, knock'd him on the Head with a Stone, so that he died of the Wound. His Bishop after having suspended him for seven Years from the Celebration of Divine Service; at last consulted Hildebert, to know whether he ought to restore him to his Functions. The latter declares, That it seem'd to him, that a Priest who has committed Man-slaughter, ought no longer to offer the Holy Sacrifice, although he did it in his own defence. He maintains with St. Ambrose, That it is not lawful for one Man to kill another, even in defending his own Life; and although it were permitted, yet it ought not to be done. He concludes, That if the like case had happen'd to one of his Diocefans, he would have refer'd the Matter to the Holy See.

In the Sixty first, he reproves certain Monks, who refus'd to entertain the Bishop of Chartres at their Table: He shews, that the perfection of the Monastick Life does not consist in performing the outward Duties, but in the Practice of Humility and Charity: As for what those Monks alledg'd as an Excuse for their neglect, viz. That they were not able to give Entertainment to the Bishop, by reason of their Poverty; he asserts, That they ought to sell or pawn the Ornaments of their Church, to exercise Hospitality towards their Diocefan.

In the Sixty second, he recommends to a Widow, who had devoted her self to God, the giving of Alms to the Poor.

In the Sixty third, he commends the Countess Adela, in regard that after her Conversion, instead of undertaking a Pilgrimage to the Holy Land, she had embrac'd the Monastick Life.

In the Sixty fourth, he censures the Custom of a Monastery, where both the Species of the Eucharist were not administer'd separately; but that of the Bread steep't in the other of the Wine. He maintains, That the sop't Bread which our Saviour gave to Judas was not the Eucharist.

In the Sixty fifth, written by Hildebert, as well as the next, after his Translation from the Bishoprick of Mans to the Arch-bishoprick of Tours; he acquaints the Pope, That he had taken a Journey to Bretagne, where he held a Synod at Nantes, A. D. 1127. for the Reformation of the Church, chiefly as to what concerns incestuous Marriages, and the Succession of Relations to Ecclesiastical Preferments: That the Prince had remitted in that Synod, the Right which was claim'd by the Lords to seize on the moveable Goods of deceased Persons, and even his own Royal Prerogative, by virtue of which all manner of Wracks at Sea belong to his demans: That it was also ordain'd, That the Bishops should publish in their Synods, and the Priests in their Churches, That those who presume to contract unlawful Marriages, for the future, shall be excommunicated; and that the Children born in such Wedlock were declar'd illegitimate: That the Ecclesiastical Constitutions were reviv'd, concerning the Qualities requisite in Persons, who design to receive Orders: That it was prohibited to ordain the Sons of Priests, unless they turn'd Regular Canons or Monks; and that as for those who were already ordain'd, they were not allow'd to serve their Fathers Parishes in that Quality, lest they should find means to succeed them: And lastly, That very strict Prohibitions were made that Benefices should be transmitted, as it were by Succession. He entreats the Pope to confirm what they had done, more especially the Resignation that the Prince had made of his Right to the Shipwracks. Pope Honorius II. grants him this Confirmation in the Letter which immediately follows that of which we have but now made mention.

In the Sixty seventh, he complains to that Pope, that the King of France had confiscated the Revenues belonging to his Church, and would not suffer him to enter the Territories of his Kingdom, because he refus'd to dispose of the Benefices according to the pleasure of that Prince. He likewise wrote to him about the Contests that happen'd in the Church of Tours, between the Dean and some of the Canons, which was carry'd on to that height, that one of the Canons was maimed, by one of the Collegues and by the Dean's Friends. The latter was accus'd of being accessory to the Fact, but he deny'd it, and no Proof being brought against him, he clear'd himself by his own Oath, and by that of seven other Priests.

In the Sixty eighth, he tells the Pope, that he had done what his Holiness requir'd of him, having restor'd Bracerius to his Prebend, which he deserv'd to lose, by reason of the enormity of his Crimes, and in sending to him Radulphus Dean of St. Maurice, of whom mention is made made in the preceding Letter. He justifies the Innocence of that Dean, and acquaints the Pope with the Judgment passed in his favour.

In the Sixty ninth, he entreats the Pope to confirm a Donation, that the King of England made to the Church of Fontevrault.

In the Seventieth, he comforts the Queen of England for her Barrenness, and gives her to understand, that she ought not to look upon it as a disgrace, but as the means of procuring her Salvation, by adopting the Poor for her Children.

In the Seventy first, he exhorts to perseverance, a Countess, who had quitted worldly Affairs to embrace the Monastick Life.

The Seventy fourth, is a Reprimand given to a Clergy-man, who did not lead a regular Course of Life.

In the Seventy fifth, he complains that none of his Friends undertook to maintain the Interests of his Church, in the Court of the King of France.

In the Seventy ninth, he determines, That Nuns who live in a Monastery, ought not to go out of it alone, but accompanied with one of their Matrons: He reproves those who act otherwise on Holy-days; and observes, that about thirty Years were pass'd since he wrote a Treatise of Virginity. Lastly, he declaims against some Nuns, who dwell in private Houses, to lead a more dissolute Course of Life.

The Eightieth, is a Letter by Marbodius Bishop of Rennes, which we shall mention in its proper place.

The Eighty second is an excellent Letter directed to Pope Honorius, in which he expresses himself with Submission and Freedom, against the Appeals made to the See of Rome, which were so frequent in that Age. He entreats him at first not to be offended at his Letter, nor to attribute that to Presumption, which he was oblig'd to do by necessity, and lest the Church should be oppress'd by force of Arms; the effects of which he himself knew by Experience. He adds, that he has reason to hope that his Remonstrance will not be unacceptable to him, because it is written for the sake of Justice. Afterwards he declares, That that Custom was never approv'd on the hither side of the Alpes, and that it is not an Article grounded on the Ecclesiastical Laws that all sorts of Appeals should be receiv'd at Rome: That if that Innovation prevail, the Authority of the Popes will be disannull'd, and the whole vigour of Church-Discipline will be subverted: "For (says he) where is the Oppressor that does not enter an Appeal, as soon as he is threaten'd with an Anathema? Where is the Clerk who will not continue in his exorbitant Courses, defending himself by a declinatory Appeal? Or by what means can the Bishops inflict any Punishment for the least Act of Disobedience? An Appeal will certainly put a stop to his Censure, weaken his Constancy, baffle his Resolutions, impose Silence upon him, and cause all manner of Crimes to go unpunished. However, Hildebert owns, that the Church on the hither side of the Alpes has acknowledg'd some Appeals, and 'tis but reasonable that those who have lawful Grievances, should get them redress'd by that means, as also that those Persons, whose Judges are their Enemies, or suspected, or who fear the Outragiousness of the People, should have the same liberty to secure themselves: But he maintains, that Appeals which are only enter'd on purpose to put a stop to the Course of Justice, and to procrastinate Affairs, ought not to be authoriz'd; and therefore he entreats the Pope no longer to admit any of that Nature.

The Eighty third Letter, which is the last of this Collection, does not belong to Hildebert, but is part of the Preface written by Ives of Chartres on his Decree. Therefore that Piece was only inserted amongst Hildebert's Letters by a Mistake.

Father Dachery publish'd in the Fourth Tome of his Spicilegium, Nine Letters of Hildebert, among which are Three very eloquent ones about the Imprisonment of Pope Paschal II. and afterwards the same Author set forth Fifteen others, which are annexed in the end of the Thirteenth Tome. There are some amongst these last, that relate to the Persecution which Hildebert suffer'd by reason of the displeasure of the King of France, and the Quarrel that arose between the Dean of Tours and his Canons. In the Ninth, he entreats the Pope not to grant the Pall to the Bishop of Dol.

Hildebert's other Pieces, are two Hymns on our Saviour's Nativity; A Paraphrase on the Canon of the Mass in Verse; A Sermon on these Words of Isaiah, Chap. 35. Then the Eyes of the Blind shall be opened; Another on these Words of Jesus Christ in St. Luke, Chap. 12. Unto whomsoever much is given, of him shall be much requir'd; A Synodical Discourse to his Curates. All these Works and Letters are extant in the Collections call'd Bibliotheca Patrum.

There are also to be seen in different places, some other Works attributed to Hildebert, viz. The Life of St. Hugh Abbot of Cluny, in the Bibliotheca Cluniacensis, publish'd by Duchesus; The Epitaph of Berenger, referr'd to by William of Malmesbury; A Letter written to Reginald the Monk, and the Preface to the Life of St. Radegonda, set forth by Father Mabillon in the First Tome of his Analesta, with the beginning of that Life, of which that Father has a Manuscript Copy in his Possession. Rosweida makes mention of the Life of St. Mary the Egyptian, in Verse by Hildebert, which (as they say) is kept in the Library of Lipsick. There are also in the Libraries, several Tracts ascribed to Hildebert, but we have lost his Treatise tise of Virginitie. Besides these Works, Father Homme has likewise published some in his Collection, which he attributes to Hildebert, but it is not probable, that they belong to that Author.

The other Works of Hildebert, fall very much short of the Elegancy and Politeness of his Letters. His Poetical pieces are gross; neither has he observ'd the Rules of Quantity. His Sermons are written in like manner, in a weak and very mean Style. However he was a noted Prelate, who shew'd a great deal of Prudence, Discretion and Constancy in the Management of Affairs, during the whole Course of his Life.

GUIBERT Abbot of Nogent.

Guibert
Abbot of Nogent.

GUIBERT Abbot of Nogent sous Coucy, was born in a Village belonging to the Diocese of Beauvais, of a rich and noble Family. He lost his Father Eurard in his Youth, and was brought up by his Mother, who took a particular care of his Education, but having afterwards retir'd to a Monastery, and being inform'd, that her Son did not follow the Instructions she had given him, she oblig'd him to take Lodgings in the Abby of St. German in the Diocese of Beauvais, to live under the conduct of his old Tutor, who became a Monk in that Abbey. Guibert did not continue long there, before he had an inclination to assume the Monastick Habit, and actually put that Design in execution, contrary to the Advice of his Mother and Tutor. After having turn'd Monk, he was afflicted with many Temptations, but at last was deliver'd from them, by the means of Prayer and Study, and was chosen Abbot of Nogent sous Coucy in the most remote part of the Diocese of Laon, where he died in 1124.

A certain small Tract about Preaching, is usually prefix'd to Guibert's Works, being the Preface to his Moral Commentaries on the Holy Scripture, which is full of Instructions, and very methodical. He begins with observing, that it is very dangerous for a Person obliged to Preach by the Duty of his Function, to neglect the performance of that Duty, by reason that as it is a matter of pernicious Consequence to shew bad Examples; so it is a very great Offence, not to endeavour to contribute somewhat to the reclaiming of Sinners by wholesome Instructions. He adds, That Men have different Motives to abstain from Preaching; that some are induc'd to do it by Pride, for fear of passing for Preachers, a Quality commonly reputed contemptible in the World; others by Envy, not to communicate their Knowledge to others, and others by Disgust or Slothfulness, in regard that they do not think themselves to lie under any Obligation, because they have no cure of Souls. He maintains, that all Christians, who have attain'd to any Knowledge of the Holy Scriptures, are oblig'd to Preach the Word of God, and that they ought to propose no other end of their Preaching, but God himself, who is the Subject of it: That Bishops, Abbots, Curates and all Christians in general, are not only obliged to abstain from doing Evil, and from giving bad Examples, but are also under an obligation to do all manner of Good that lies in their power, both by their Example and Doctrine. He concludes from that Principle, that the practice of Virtues and the Instruction of others ought to be join'd together: Thus a Preacher ought to lead an innocent Life, and he who lives well, ought to apply himself to the instructing of others.

This Author advises that Preaching be preceded by Prayer, to the end that the Soul inspir'd with the Love of God, may ardently express the Sentiments it has of God, to inflame the Hearts of the Auditors with the same Zeal, with which it is transported itself. "For" (says he) a Discourse pronounced in a luke-warm and languid manner, not being agreeable even to him that pronounces it, cannot give satisfaction to the Hearers; and it would be wonderful, that a Discourse deliver'd by a Person who is not animated himself, should be capable of animating others. Care ought also to be taken (continues he) since the Word is spread abroad according to the effusion of the Heart, that the Discourse be not too tedious by reason of its length, and do not clog the Auditors: Therefore how fervent soever the Zeal of the Preacher may be, how copious soever his Subject, how strong soever his Memory, and how extraordinary soever his fluency of Discourse, yet he ought to have regard to the weakness of his Auditors, and to consider, that 'tis more commendable to lay down a few Truths, which will be receiv'd attentively, than to deliver an infinite number of Things, that cannot be retain'd; and that 'tis expedient to leave off before his Auditors be tir'd, to the end that when there shall be an occasion to Preach to them at another time, they may be dispos'd to hearken to his Doctrine. He likewise admonishes Preachers, that they ought to render their Sermons profitable both to the Ignorant and to the Learned, and to explain the Matters they handle in such a manner, as may be intelligible to all sorts of Capacities; and that it is requisite, to intermix some Sentences taken out of the Old Testament in their Discourses, because they appear new, and serve to stir up the Affections of their Auditors.

Afterwards he treats of the Subjects that ought to be chosen by Preachers, and refers them to the Four senses of Scripture, viz. the Literal, the Allegorical, the Tropological and Analogical.

gogical. He observes, that altho' Allegories mingled in the connection of a Discourse be agreeable, and it be sometimes convenient to explain the literal sense of some Passages of Scripture; nevertheless the principal aim of a Preacher ought to be, to discover the inward disposition of the Man; that is to say, his Thoughts, Affections and Passions, and to make so natural representations of them, that every one may acknowledge therein the secret impulses of his own Mind. "Furthermore, (says he) Admonitions ought not only to be given concerning the practice of Vertues, but also with reference to the connection of Vices, and "the means of shunning them----- Sometimes a Discourse on the Nature of Vice is no less profitable than one on Vertue: For how can a Man take delight in the beauty of Vertue, if he be not sensible of the deformity of Vice? Or how can he avoid the latter, if he have no knowledge of the former? Therefore 'tis requisite to make known both, to cause a Man to be acquainted with himself, and to represent to him the inward disposition of his Mind.

This inward Disposition of a Man is perfectly describ'd according to Guibert in St. Gregory's Treatises of Morality and in Cassian's Conferences, but it cannot be well learnt, but by Experience and the exercises of a Spiritual Life. He would not advise those that are not accustomed to the practice of it, to venture upon new Allegories, and he gives Rules to those who have attain'd to perfection in spiritual Exercises, to walk safely in a Path, from whence without due circumspection they may easily go astray.

He admonishes Preachers, to deliver their Sermons after such a manner, as it may appear that they have no other intention, but to instruct, and to promote the Salvation of their Auditors, and that they do not seek for vain Glory by their Eloquence: "For nothing (says he) "gives greater offence to an Auditor, than when he is perswaded that the Preacher is only "induc'd to speak, by Ostentation or private Interest; so that a Preacher, that has such a Character, exasperates rather than instructs, and by how much the more his Discourses abound "with Rhetorical Ornaments, he renders himself so much the more contemptible to his "Auditors.

Lastly, he treats of the principal Matters, that ought to serve as a Subject for Preachers, and advises them not only to represent to Sinners the everlasting Punishments that they shall undergo hereafter in the future State, but also the Troubles, Torments, Vexations and other Calamities, to which they are obnoxious in this Life. This is the Subject of the Preface, which he apparently made to serve in stead of an Apology against the Opinion of his Abbot, who was unwilling to permit him either to Preach or to Write. It is followed by ten Books of Moral Commentaries upon Genesis, written in imitation of those of St. Gregory on Job, and by Ten other Books of Commentaries of the same Nature on the Prophecies of Hosea and Amos, and on the Lamentations of Jeremiah, on which he impos'd the Title of Topologie.

Guibert's Treatise against the Jews is a Confutation of a certain Piece full of Blasphemies against Jesus Christ. He Discourses particularly of our Saviour's Conception in the Womb of a Virgin, and upon occasion of that Question, proceeds to Treat of Original Sin and Concupiscence. There is a remarkable Passage about Images, in which he says, "That we "honour the Invisible Things in the visible Signs; or rather, that we fix our wandering Mind "on the Contemplation of spiritual Things, by looking upon Pictures, which serve as it "were to admonish us of our Duty.

In his Treatise of the reality of the Body of Jesus Christ, he debates two Questions, viz. one on the Sop that was given by him to Judas, and the other about the reality of our Saviour's Body in the Eucharist. As to the First, he determines, that Judas receiv'd the Sacrament with the other Apostles, but that the Sop which our Lord gave him, was not a Sacrament, or sacred Sign, but the Sign of his Treason. In discussing the second Question, he confutes the Opinion of those, that deny the real Presence, and who believe, that the Body of Jesus Christ is only a Figure in the Eucharist.

The Treatise of the Praises of the Virgin Mary, contains many Encomium's on the Blessed Mother of our Lord, and the History of some Miracles wrought by her Intercession. He concludes with a Prose or Hymn in her Honour.

In the Tract about Virginity, he does not only Treat of its Excellency, but also of the means of preserving it; of the Vertues that ought to accompany it, and of the Vices that are destructive of it.

In the Treatise of the Pledges or Relicks of the Saints, Guibert after having justified himself in the Preface, as to the Expression utter'd by him that the Eucharist supplies the Place of Jesus Christ, he proceeds to treat of the Honour due to Saints, of their Relicks, and of the Abuses committed upon that account; alledging, 1. That the Customs of Churches may be different, as to matters of Discipline, as about Fasts, the manner of Singing, &c. 2. That it is necessary to receive the Sacrament of Baptism and of the Lord's Supper; in such manner nevertheless, that one cannot be Sav'd without being Baptiz'd, and yet one may attain to Salvation without actually receiving the Body and Blood of Jesus Christ, as it appears by the Examples of some Martyrs, who never receiv'd the Communion, and of some Hermits, who receiv'd it very seldom. 3. That there are some Customs, which are not necessary for Salvation, and yet are observ'd in the Churches, as the Relicks of Saints, and certain Things that serv'd serv'd for their use, which we respect and honour to follow their Example, and to obtain their Protection. 4. That they only ought to be taken for Saints, who are acknowledged as such either by an ancient Tradition, or by authentick Records, and not those to whom that quality is attributed by Fancy or in some fabulous Relations. 5. He censures those who invent false Tales, and requires that the Histories of the Lives and Actions of the Saints be carefully examined, and that those only be Honour'd of whose Holiness we have a certain Account, and who undoubtedly died the Death of the Righteous. 6. He distinguishes several sorts of Persons, by whom God thinks fit to work Miracles; some of them being as it were the Canals or Instruments that he makes use of in the performing of preternatural Operations, which tend to the advantage of others, and are unprofitable to themselves: God bestows special Graces on others, which they never deserv'd, and makes them worthy by his meer Mercy: Sometimes he affords them to the Faithful, as a recompence for their Faith and Uprightness. 7. He insists, that severe Punishments ought to be inflicted on those who Forge false Miracles. 8. He enquires who they are that ought to be Honour'd as Saints; of these the Martyrs are the First, but it ought to be certainly prov'd, that they suffer'd for the Christian Faith. As for Confessors, he determines, that they only are to be respected in that Quality, who were eminent for their extraordinary Sanctity, and of whose Salvation we are morally certain: For when there are grounds to doubt of it, he would by no means have them invoc'd. Upon that occasion, he proposes the Example of the Church, which would not avouch that the Body of the Virgin Mary was raised from the Dead and Glorified, altho' there are many Reasons that induce us to believe it. 9. He observes, in reference to the acknowledged and avouched Saints, that there are many Errors concerning their Relicks; in regard that the Body, Head and other Members of the same Saint are to be found in different Places, and every one pretends to have the true Relick. 10. He maintains, That forasmuch as the Bodies of the Saints are made of Earth, as those of other Men; it were more expedient to leave them in their Tombs, than to set them in Shrines of Gold and Silver, to carry them about; and to divide them, as it is usually done. "Indeed (says he) if the Bodies of the Saints had continu'd in the Places where they were, according to the order of Nature, that is to say, in their Tombs; there would have been no mistake nor contest about the reality of their Relicks: For that happens, only because they are taken out of their Tombs; cut in Pieces; and carried about from one place to another. 'Tis true, that Piety gave occasion to the removing of them, but Curiosity, in process of time, corrupted that which was done at first with simplicity---Let others judge as they shall think fit; for my part, I make no scruple to assert, that they have not done a thing acceptable to God or his Saints, in opening their Tombs, or in dividing their Members after such a manner; since the Heathens themselves had a respect for the Sepulchres of the Dead. St. Gregory return'd for Answer to an Empress who importun'd him upon the like occasion, that he durst not send her St. Peter's Head, and the Saints have often shewn notable marks of their Indignation against those, who have presum'd thus to dismember their Bodies. 11. He acknowledges nevertheless, that those, who honour false Relicks without knowing them to be so, and supposing them to belong to some Saint, do not Sin, and that he that invokes a Person, who is no Saint, believing him to be really so, may be heard of God, who knows his good Intention. Lastly, he condemns the filthy Lucre that is made of those Relicks, by selling them, or by exacting Mony for shewing them; carrying them in Procession; exposing them, &c. These are the principal Points decided by Guibert in his first Book of the Pledges of the Saints, and they are accompany'd with great variety of Examples of real and counterfeit Miracles, of true and false Saints, and of genuine and supposititious Relicks, which are capable of affording much satisfaction and delight to the Reader.

In the second Book, to confute those, who set a great value on certain Relicks, which they asserted to belong to our Saviour, as his Teeth, Fore-skin, &c. our Author treats of the Mystery in which he has really left us his Body: He maintains, That Jesus Christ left no Relicks of his Body, but that he has given it us entire in the Eucharist: That that Body is not divided and distributed to the Faithful by Parcels, but that it is given altogether entire under every Host: That this Sacrament is receiv'd by the Unworthy, as well as by the Worthy, altho' the former do not receive the Grace of the Sacrament: That it may perhaps be devour'd by Rats and other Animals and pass thro' their Belly, yet nothing unworthy can befall the Body of Jesus Christ; so that the corruption and other alterations that appear to our Senses happen only to the Species, and not to the real Body of our Saviour: Lastly, That that Body is not in the Eucharist in the state of a dead or crucified Person, but in that of a living and glorified Redeemer. He starts another Question by the way, viz. Whether the Bread that remain'd in the Pyx on the Altar, during the Consecration, unknown to the Priest, were Consecrated; He determines in the negative, and that if an Host were put under the † Palle, or a Drop of Wine in the Chalice, without the knowledge of the Priest; they would not be consecrated.

After having discours'd of the true Relick of Jesus Christ in the second Book, Guibert proceeds in the Third, to confute the false ones, which some Persons pretended to have in their possession. He begins with this fine Maxim, " 'Tis requisite to approve the Devotion and Respect that People have for God and the Saints, but only as far as that Devotion does not “deviate from the bounds of true Religion; otherwise it happens, that the devout Person, instead of receiving the recompence of his Action, becomes culpable by his Error: For when any thing is said of God, or a Worship is render'd to him, contrary to the testimonies of Truth, the Party sins so much the more dangerously, in regard that Piety is made use of for a Pretence; since nothing is more pernicious, than to do Evil, and at the same time to imagine it to be a good Action: For how can any Man correct a Fault, if he do not only not believe it to be an Error, but is also perswaded, that it is an action which deserves to be well rewarded? Afterwards he vigorously opposes the Opinion of the Monks of St. Medard, who boasted, that they had a Tooth of Jesus Christ, and grounds his assertions chiefly on this Argument, that our Saviour being raised from the Dead, all his Members and Parts ought to be re-united to his glorified Body. 'Tis true indeed, that those Monks might object, that it may reasonably be suppos'd, that our Saviour's first Teeth were shed, as those of other Children, and that which they had was one of those. Guibert in like manner proposes this very Objection in their Name, and eludes it, by averring, that there are many other Reasons to disprove their Argument, and that they had none to establish it. The principal that he alledges is, that 'tis not probable, that the Hair, Teeth, Fore-skin and other Things that fell from the Body of the Child Jesus, were kept at that time, and that there are no grounds to believe that they were preserved by the Virgin Mary. He likewise derides the pretended Milk of the Blessed Virgin, which was kept in the Church of Laon, and in some other Places. The Monks of St. Medard having alledged divers Miracles in vindication of their Relick, Guibert replies, that that Tooth perhaps might be the Tooth of some Saint, or that those Miracles were wrought, upon account of the Faith of those Persons, who came thither to honour a Relick, which they suppos'd to belong to Jesus Christ.

In the last Book that bears this Title, Of the Internal World, he Treats of Visions and of the Apparitions of Demons or Souls, and shews that the Visions of the Prophets, were Visions of Corporal Things: He acknowledges that Demons are disper'd in several places, and that they are present in this Visible World. He maintains, That the Happiness of the Elect, and the punishments of the Reprobates, are not Corporeal, for the present, but Spiritual, and is of Opinion that Hell-fire, with which the Devils are Tormented, is not a Material and Corporeal Fire, but the extreme anguish they have, to see themselves depriv'd for ever of the blissful State, and of the Beatific Vision; as the Happiness of the Blessed Spirits consists, in the delight they take in beholding the Glory of God. Lastly, he proves that Souls are of a Spiritual Nature; That they have no Figure; That they are only capable of Spiritual Sympathies, and that Bodies cannot act on them.

His Piece call'd, Gesta Dei per Francos, or an Account of the Actions that God perform'd by the French, is divided into Eight Books, and Dedicated to Lisard Bishop of Soissons. It contains a large and accurate History of the first Crusade undertaken by the French, and of the Conquests they made in the Levant, and in the Holy-Land, more especially under the Conduct of Boemond Duke of Apulia, and of Godfrey of Bouillon King of Jerusalem. This Work is written in a swelling Style, some Verses being intermixed with the Prose; but the Author has every where acted as a very faithful Historian, and has ever inclin'd to insert such Narratives, as had no other Grounds but popular Reports.

The Life of Guibert written by himself, is not a simple Relation of what befel him, but a Work partly Moral in imitation of St. Augustin's Confessions, and partly Historical. He makes long Digressions on different Subjects, relating the History of the Abbeys of St. German, and Nogent sous Coucy, with that of the Churches of Laon, Soissons, &c. There are also divers Narrations, as a great number of Miracles, Visions and Apparitions, and of other Historical Matters of Fact that happen'd in his time.

Among the Works, of St. Bernard is likewise to be found a Sermon on these words of the last Verse of the XI. Chapter of the Wisdom of Solomon. Vice shall not prevail against Wisdom; she reacheth from one end to another mightily, and sweetly doth she order all things, which is attributed to Guibert of Nogent; because he intimates in the XVI. Chapter of the first Book of his Life, that he made a Sermon on that Text.

Besides these Works Guibert wrote a Treatise on the Sentences taken out of the Gospels, and the Books of the Prophets, of which he makes mention in the XVI. Chapter of the first Book of his Life; but this Work was not brought to Light and perhaps was never Completed. Father Oudin informs us, that he found in the Library of the Abbeys of Vauchlaur and igny, certain Commentaries written by Guibert in the Prophecies of Obadiah, Jenab, Micah, Zachariah, Joel, Nahum, Habbakuk and Zephaniah.

This Author having spent much time in the Study of Grammar and Poetry, wrote in a very clear Style, and Compos'd indifferent good Verses. He argues with a great deal of Judgment in his Dogmatical Treatises, and handles the Matters Methodically. He gives a very Natural Description of the inward Dispositions and Passions of Men, in his Treatises of Morality, but is too florid and prolix in the Historical.

His Works were publish'd by Father Luke Dachery, in Folio, by Billaine at Paris, A. D. 1651. He has Illustrated them with Learned Notes and large Observations, in which he refers to a great number of Ancient Monuments, and produces the History of divers Abbeys.

He has likewise inserted in the same Volume to render it of a Competent largeness, the Lives of St. Germane, St. Simon, Count of Crepy, and St. Salberga the first Abbess of St. John at Laon, who Founded that Monastery, A. C. 640. as also three Books of Hugh Arch-bishop of Rouen against the Hereticks of his Time, and the Continuation of Sigebert's Chronicle by Robert of Torigny Abbot of St. Michael's Mount, with a Treatise of the same Author about the Reformation of divers Abbeys, and several Lists of the Deans of the Cathedral Church of Laon, and of the Abbots of St. John and St. Martins in the same City. Guibert's History of the Crusade was already set forth by Jacobus Bongarsius in his Collection of Historians, printed in 1611. under the same Title that Guibert impos'd on his Work, viz. Gesta Dei per Francos.

SIGEBERT a Monk of Gemblours, after having been publick Professor of Divinity in the Monastery of St. Vincent at Mets return'd to his own Convent, where he apply'd himself entirely to Study, and to the Composing of Books. He vigorously maintain'd the Interest of the Emperors Henry IV. and Henry V. against the Popes, and died A. D. 1113. The following Catalogue of his Works was made by himself.

He compos'd during his abode at St. Vincent at Mets, the Life of St. Thierry Bishop, of the same City, and Founder of the Abbey, with an Encomium on that Saint in Heroick Verse. The Passion of St. Lucia in Alcaick Verse: An Answer to those, who censur'd the Prophecy of that Saint, in which (as it is reported) she foretold that the Persecution would cease within a little while, upon the Expulsion of Dioclesian and the Death of Maximilian: A Sermon in commendation of the same Saint, in which he relates the History of the several translations of her Body from Sicily to Corfu, and from thence to Mets: And the Life of St. Sigebert King of France, who founded the Church and Abbey of St. Martin near Mets.

Sigebert after his return to the Monastery of Gemblours, compos'd the following Works, viz.

The History of the Passion of the Theban Martyrs in Heroick Verse, and the Life of St. Guibert Founder of the Church of Gemblours: He likewise corrected the old Relation of the Life of St. Lambert, and made a new one illustrated with Comparisons taken out of the ancient Writers, as also an Answer to a Letter that Pope Gregory VII. wrote to Herman Bishop of Mets. To these Pieces are to be added, an Apology for the Emperor Henry, against those who inveigh against Masses said by married Priests: A Letter written in the Name of the Churches of Liege and Cambray, against Paschal II's Letter, in which that Pope excites the Count of Flanders to make War with the People of those Territories: An Answer to the Inhabitants of Trier concerning the Fast of the Ember-Weeks: The Book of Ecclesiastes in Heroick Verse, according to the literal, allegorical and mythological Senses: The continuation of Eusebius's Chronicle after St. Ferome to the Year 1111. A Treatise about the Reformation of the Cycles, and another of Illustrious Personages in imitation of St. Ferom and Gennadius.

Of all these Works there only remain in our Possession, the continuation of St. Ferom's Chronicle from A. C. 381. to 1112. The Treatise of Ecclesiastical Writers: The Letter written in the Name of the Clergy of Liege and Cambray: And the Lives of St. Sigebert, St. Guibert and St. Maclou, refer'd to by Surius.

This Author is very accurate in his Writing, and attain'd to considerable proficiency in the Study of the Liberal Sciences, and in all sorts of Humane Learning.

HONORIUS SOLITARIUS

A Scholastick Divine of the Church of Autun.

Autun.

HONORIUS, a Priest and Scholastick Divine of the Church of Autun surnam'd the Solitary, flourish'd under the Emperor Henry V. A. D. 1120. We have little account of his Life, but many of his Works are still extant.

The most considerable, is his Treatise of the Lights of the Church, or of the Ecclesiastical Writers, first published by Suffridus, and afterwards by Aubertus Miraeus in their Collections of Authors, who wrote those that treated of Ecclesiastical Affairs. Honorius has divided this Work into four Books, the Three first of which are only an Abridgment of the Treatises on the Ecclesiastical Writers by St. Ferom, Gennadius and Isidorus. He gives an account, in the last, of some Authors since Venerable Bede to his time. This Treatise contains almost nothing else but the Names and Characters of the Authors, and the Titles of their Works: It is follow'd by another Treatise of the same Nature, containing the Names of the ancient Hereticks and their principal Doctrines Printed at Basil in 1544. To these two Treatises may be be added a Chronological Table of the Popes, from St. Peter to Innocent II. which is extant among the other Works of this Author.

The Treatise call'd, The Pearl of the Soul; or, Of the Divine Offices, is divided into four Books. In the First, he treats of the Sacrifice of the Mass; Of its Ceremonies and Prayers; Of the Church; Of its Parts and Ornaments; Of the Ministers of the Altar and their Habits, &c. In the Second, he discourses of the Canonical Hours, and of the Ecclesiastical Offices for the Day and Night. In the Third, of the principal Festivals of the Year; And in the Fourth, of the Concord or Agreement of the Offices of the whole Year, with the particular Days and Times on which they are celebrated. These Books are full of a great number of Arguments and mystical Explications that have no other Grounds but the Author's Imagination. They were printed at Lipsick, A. D. 1514. and in the Collections of the Writers who have treated of Ecclesiastical Offices.

The Treatise of the Image of the World is divided into three Books: In the First of these, he treats of the World and of its Parts: In the Second, of Time and its Parts; and the Third is a Chronological Series of Emperors, Kings and other Sovereign Princes, from the Creation of the World to the Emperor Frederick Barberossa.

The Piece that bears the Title of The Philosophy of the World, divided into four Books, is a Treatise of the System of the World, and of its principal Parts: It is follow'd by another Tract of the same Nature, touching the Motion of the Sun and Planets.

The Treatise of Predestination and of Free-will, is written in form of a Dialogue, and has for its Subject the Explication of that common Question, How can Free-will be reconciled with the Certainty of Predestination? He defines Predestination to be an eternal preparation to Happiness, or Misery of those that have done Good or Evil: He affirms, That it imposes no necessity of doing either; because God does not predestinate to Happiness or Misery, but with respect to the Merits of the Person: He rejects the Opinion of those who assert, That Free-will consists in the Power of doing Good or Evil, and defines it to be a Capacity of performing Righteousness voluntarily and without constraint: He maintains, That Man by his Nature, is endued with a Power to act according to the Rule of Righteousness, although he stands in need of Grace to do it, and is capable of resisting that Grace: He says, That God made all reasonable Creatures for his Glory, but that he left them free to do either Good or Evil by their own Will, and that he would have all Men to be sav'd, but that 'tis their free Will, which is the cause of their Damnation. Afterwards he explains, why God made Creatures, when he foreknew that they would sin against him, and that they would be damned: Why the Word was incarnate: Upon what account, Mankind having deserved nothing but Punishment, after the committing of Sin, God leaves some in the Mass of Perdition, who are damned by their free Will, and saves others by his special Grace, which they by no means deserv'd: And how Salvation ought rather to be attributed to Grace than to free Will, although free Will co-operates with Grace. He observes, That Children, that incur Damnation, are justly condemn'd to that Punishment; and that those who attain to Salvation, are sav'd by Grace, which they never merited: And as for adult Persons, that they are sav'd by Grace and free Will, and that those who are damned, are doom'd to that Sentence by Justice, and by their free Will: That Predestination neither saves nor damns any Person by force; although all the Elect are infallibly sav'd, and the Reprobates infallibly damned: But so far as 'tis not known, whether one be of the number of the Elect or of the Reprobates, that 'tis requisite to use all possible endeavours for the attaining to Salvation: And that the number of the Elect is certainly determined, because God from all Eternity, knew those who would die in that State. He adds, That Man since Adam's Transgression, may fall by his free Will, but that he cannot rise again but by Grace; and that God sometimes denies that Grace, to those who are too Presumptuous: That every Thing which happens in the World, ought to be referr'd to God; either because he does it, or because he permits it, or in regard that he does not prevent it; that he causes all things to tend to the promoting of his own Glory; that he shews Mercy on whomsoever he thinks fit, by affording them his Grace; that he hardens others at his Pleasure, by leaving them in their Wickedness and in the State of Reprobation. Lastly, after having made some Moral Reflections, our Author concludes this Work, with a Recapitulation of the Principles that he had already establish'd.

In the Catalogue of the Works of Honorius of Autun, no mention is made of certain Questions relating to the Books of Proverbs and Ecclesiastes, but they come very near his particular Style and Genius.

His Commentary on the Canticles is preceded by a Preface, concerning the different senses of Holy Scripture, the Division of the Sacred Books, and the general Questions which relate to that Book in particular. He explains the Text of it according to the four Senses expressed in his Preface, viz. the Historical, the Allegorical, the Tropological and the Anagogical.

This Treatise is follow'd by another call'd, The Seal of the blessed Virgin Mary; in which he applies to Jesus Christ and to the blessed Virgin, what is express'd in the Book of Canticles, concerning the Bridegroom and the Spouse.

All these Works were collected by Andreas Schottus and Jan. Cave ius, and printed in the Twelfth Tome of the Bibliotheca Patrum of the Colen Edition, and in the Twentieth of that of Lyons.

The following Works compos'd by the same Author are 168, viz. An Illustration divided into three Books, the first of which treats of Jesus Christ; the second of the Church, and the third of Eternal Life. It cannot be that which is attributed to St. Anselm, and which is extant amongst his Works, because the Subject of the three Books written by the latter, is altogether different: The Mirror of the Church consisting of Moral Discourses: A Treatise call'd, The Scandal raised by the Incontinency of Priests: An Historical Abridgment: A Treatise of the Eucharist: The Knowledge of Life; or a Treatise of God, and of Eternal Life: The Ladder of Heaven, or the Degrees of Vision: Some Extracts out of St. Augustin, in form of a Dialogue between God and the Soul: A Treatise of the Pope and the Emperor: A Commentary on the Books of Psalms and Canticles: Certain Homilies on those Gospels that were not explain'd by St. Gregory: The Key of natural Philosophy, concerning the Nature of Things: The spiritual Nutriment, about the Festivals of our Saviour and the Saints, and some Letters. Mention is made of these Works; and of those that are still extant, in the end of his Treatise of Ecclesiastical Writers, and in Tribemius.

In the end of the Works of Honorius of Autun, is annexed a certain Commentary on the Canticles, that is more Moral than Mystical, and which some attribute to him; but it is not his genuine Commentary. This Author is not of good esteem, upon account of his Style or Accuracy, but for his Industry, and the Pains he has taken in making Enquiries.

ERNULPHUS or ARNULPHUS

Bishop of Rochester.

Ernul-phus or Arnulphus Bishop of Rochester.

ERNULPHUS or ARNULPHUS, a Monk of St. Lucian at Beauvais, left his Monastery by reason of the Disorders that happen'd therein, and made Application to Laurence Arch-bishop of Canterbury, under whom he had study'd in the Abbey of Bee. He continu'd for a long time in the Quality of a simple Monk in his Monastery at Canterbury, was made Prior of it by St. Anselm, and afterwards Abbot of Burck. At last he was ordain'd Bishop of Rochester in 1115. and govern'd that Church during nine Years and some Days. He died, A. D. 1124. in the 84th Year of his Age.

Father Dachery publish'd two Letters written by this Prelate in the second Tome of his Spicilgium, which are two small Tracts. The first is directed to Waquelin Bishop of Windsor, as an Answer to a Question, which that Bishop propos'd to him in a Conference they had together at Canterbury; viz. Whether a Woman, who has committed Adultery with her Husband's Son, whom he had by another Wife, ought to be divorced from her Husband? He maintain'd the Affirmative, and the Bishop to whom he wrote, asserted the Negative. In this Treatise Ernulphus answers the Objections of that Prelate; shewing, that all the Passages of Holy Scripture, in which 'tis forbidden to part Man and Wife, ought only to be understood of a voluntary Separation, between Persons who are not guilty of Adultery, and afterwards confirms his Opinion, by making it appear, that the Bishops, to prevent Disorders, have often condemn'd Adulterers, to abstain for ever from the use of Marriage; that it is the usual Custom of the Church; that this Punishment is ordain'd in the Penitential Books; and that a Divorce is justly allow'd upon account of Spiritual Alliance, although it be not express'd in the Scripture as Adultery. He adds, that 'tis not unjust, that a Husband should be divorced from his Wife, although he be innocent of the Crime committed by her, and that there are many other Causes, for which a Husband is obliged to put away his Wife.

The second Letter of the same Author, is directed to a certain Person nam'd Lambert, who had propos'd five Questions, although he was unknown to him. The first is to know why the Eucharist is administer'd at present after a different and almost contrary manner, to that which was observ'd by Jesus Christ; because it was customary at that time, to distribute an Host steep'd in Wine to the Communicants; whereas Jesus Christ gave his Body and Blood separately? Ernulphus replies to that Question, That our Saviour, being come into the World, for the Salvation of Men, prescrib'd to them what was necessary to be done in order to obtain it, without expressing the manner in particular: That therefore, he did not tell them. Baptize in this or that manner; let the Baptized Person be plung'd three several times in the Water; do not permit the Catechumens to be consecrated at first with Holy Chrism, &c. but only said simply, Baptize them: That by this means, the Things which are absolutely necessary may be easily known, and those that may be sometimes omitted or alter'd: That upon that very account, some Customs, which were in use in the Primitive Church, were not long observ'd: That it is certain, for Example, That the Apostles receiv'd the Communion after Supper, although it be now receiv'd Fasting: That they celebrated it on a wooden Table, although at present it is offer'd on a Stone Altar; that the Bread they made use of was ordinary Bread, and that that which is now us'd is finer and more loose: That therefore 'tis not to be admir'd, if this Bread be given steep; although there was no such Custom heretofore, that the Priest should mingle some part of the Species of Bread with the Wine: That this manner of Administration is observ'd, lest any ill Accidents should happen in the distribution of the Wine alone, and lest it should stick on the Hairs of the Beard or Whiskers, or should be spilt by the Minister.

The second Question is, Why a fourth part of the Host is put into the Chalice? He answers, That it is not customary to divide the Host into four Parts, but only into three; yet that third part, which is put into the Chalice, is as large as the fourth part of the Host; although care be taken in some Churches, to make it exactly of the bigness of the third part. He affirms that this Custom was introduc'd, because the Priest or Bishop who Officiates, ought to communicate with that part which is put into the Chalice, and to distribute the two others to the Deacon and Sub-deacon, who are Assistants. He produces another mystical Reason of the same Custom, viz. That the Body of Jesus Christ which is offer'd upon the Altar, is the Sacrament or the Figure of his Mystical Body, which is the Church, compos'd of three Orders; that is to say, Superiours, Virgins and married Persons: or else that it is done to be a Figure of the Mystery of the Trinity, or to denote the three States of Jesus Christ, viz. the Mortal, the Dead and the Raised.

The Third Question is, Why the Blood of Jesus Christ is receiv'd separately from his Body, and why it is receiv'd in his Body? He returns for Answer, That they who receive the two Species separately, do it in imitation of Jesus Christ; and although his Body be receiv'd entire, under each Species, nevertheless each Species is receiv'd separately, because our Saviour has distinguish'd those two Things; designing to express to us by his Body, his Flesh and Members, such as they appear'd, solid and entire, and by his Blood, that which was shed by him on the Cross.

The Fourth, is to know, Whether the Body of Jesus Christ be received with, or without a Soul? He answers at first, That these sorts of Questions are usually started by Persons who affect to seem learned, and who endeavour to lay Snares for the Faith of weak Christians, who humbly believe what the Holy Ghost teaches them: That 'tis most expedient not to enter upon the debate of such Questions: That although one cannot comprehend how the Bread and Wine are made the Body and Blood of Jesus Christ; nevertheless it cannot be doubted, since our Saviour said, This is my Body, this is my Blood: That it argues Foolishness to endeavour to penetrate into the incomprehensible Secrets of the Mysteries of Christianity, and into that in particular, which is a Mystery of Faith: That it is certain, that the Substance of the Bread and Wine is chang'd into the Body and Blood of Jesus Christ; although it still appear to the Senses to be Bread and Wine, and that it retains all the Qualities of them: Lastly, that as the Qualities of the Bread and Wine are to be found, although the Substance does not appear; so it may be said after the same manner, That the Qualities of the Body, are not to be found therein, although its Substance remains: And that therefore 'tis impertinent, to ask whether the Body of Jesus Christ, in the Eucharist, be dead or immortal, or whether it be endu'd with a Soul or nor.

The last Question is about the Sense of these Words of the Prophet Isaiah, Chap. 2. vers. 14. Who knoweth if God will turn and repent, and leave a Blessing behind them? He says that the turning of God consists in the remission of Sins, which he grants to those who are converted; and that when it is said, That he leaves a Blessing behind him, the meaning is, to those who follow him.

St. BRUNO and GUIGUE, Priors of the Carthusian Monastery at Grenoble.

ST. BRUNO, Founder of the Carthusian Order, was born in the City of Colen, and his St. Bruno. Parents, tho' of mean Condition, took care that he should apply himself to study; in which he soon made a Considerable Progress, and attained to much skill both in Divinity and Humane Learning: After having officiated for some time in Quality of Canon of St. Cunibert at Colen, he was invited to Rheims, made Canon and Scholastick Divine or Prebend of that Church, and nominared publick Professor of Divinity. He had some Contests with Manasses his Metropolitan, whose Irregularities he could not endure, and was one of his Accusers. Whereupon he was oblig'd to leave the City of Rheims, and took a resolution to retire entirely from Worldly Business. He had for his Assistants in carrying on that Design, Lauduin, two Canons of St. Rufus, both nam'd Stephen, one of Burgos and the other of Die, Hugh whom they call'd their Chaplain, because he was the only Priest among them, and two Lay-men nam'd Andrew and Guarin. These seven Persons, who were excited by an earnest desire to promote their own Salvation, seeking for a place convenient to lead a solitary Life, separated from all manner of Commerce with other Men, went to Grenoble, and made Application tion to Hugh Bishop of that City, a Prelate of great Sanctity, who receiv'd them with all the Marks of Charity, that they could wish for, and appointed the solitude of La Chartreuse for their Habitation, where they settled, A. D. 1086. St. Bruno, who was the most able Divine among them, was chosen their first Prior; but he was sent for to Italy, in 1090. by Pope Urban II. and retir'd with his Permission to a solitude of Calabria, call'd La Torre, where he died October 6. 1101. Lauduin succeeded him in the Priory of La Grande Chartreuse, and one Peter supplied his Place; after whom John was promoted to that Dignity, whose successor was Guigue de Castre a Native of Valence in Dauphine the fifth Prior of that famous Monastery, who committed the Statutes of the Order to Writing, and govern'd it during 27 Years, that is to say, from A. D. 1110. to 1137.

The Works of Bruno Bishop of Segnis, are commonly attributed to this St. Bruno, and among those that bear his Name, printed at Colen in 1611. and publish'd by Theodore de Camp a Carthusian Monk of that City; there are only two Letters that really belong to St. Bruno, which were written concerning his solitude in Calabria; one of them being directed to Radulphe le Verd, Provost of the Church of Rheims, whom he exhorts to retire from the World, and the other to his Monks of La Chartreuse.

Guigue
Prior of
La Grande
Chartreuse.

GUIGUE in like manner compos'd divers Works, besides the Statutes of his Order, lately printed in the first Tome of the Annals of the Carthusian Monks, viz. the Life of St. Hugh Bishop of Grenoble, refer'd to by Swius in April 12. Certain Meditations, or rather Moral Notions, printed in the Bibliotheca Patrum: A Treatise of the Contemplative Life, or the Ladder of the Cloister; or of the four Exercises of the Monastick Cell, which are annexed to St. Bernard's Works: A Treatise of Truth and Peace, a Manuscript Copy of which is kept in the Library of the Carthusians at Colen; And divers Letters, four of which are still extant, and were set forth by Father Mabillon, in the second Tome of St. Bernard's Works.

The First is directed to Haimeric Chancellor of the Church of Rome; in which he inveighs against the Pride and Luxury of the Clergy-men of his time, especially those of the Church of Rome; and asserts, that recourse ought not to be had to Arms or to the Secular Power, to maintain the Interest of the Church, or to augment its Grandeur.

In the Second, written to Hugh Prior of the Knights Templars, he declares, That he does not exhort him to make War with the visible Enemies of the Church, but to oppose its invisible Enemies, and that he would advise him to subdue Vice, rather than to attack the Infidels.

In the Third, he comforts Pope Innocent II. and exhorts him, not to be surpriz'd at the Efforts made against him by the Schismatics; avouching at the same time, that there can be but one Pope, and that the whole World ought, in a manner, to be look'd upon as his Diocess.

In the last, he writes to the Monks of the Carthusian Convent at Durbon near Marseilles; That he had caus'd a Collection to be made of St. Jerom's Letters, and had corrected a great number of Faults which had crept into them; declaring also, That he retrench'd from that Collection those Letters, which the meanness of the Style, or the difference of the Conceptions, made it appear to be unworthy of that great Man. He likewise makes a Catalogue of the latter, and passes a very judicious Censure upon them; which shews that Solitude and the practice of Piety, do not hinder a Man from applying himself to Study, and that the Art of Critique is not incompatible, with Morality and Spiritual Exercises.

ST. NORBERT.

St. Norbert.

ST. NORBERT, a Native of Santen, a Village of the Country of Cleves; the Son of Herbert and Hatwiga, was educated in the Palace of Frederick Arch-bishop of Colen, and afterwards brought to the Court of the Emperor Henry V. He was admitted among the Clergy, and receiv'd the Orders of a Deacon and Priest on the same day. He was made a Canon in his native Country, and enjoy'd divers other Spiritual Livings: But being afterwards transported with an extraordinary Zeal, he addict'd himself to Preaching, with the Permission of Pope Gelasius II. and having quitted his Benefices, and distributed his whole Estate to the Poor, he embrac'd a more regular Life. He converted by his Preaching, many Hereticks and a great number of Sinners. Upon his arrival at Laon, being entreated by Burholomew Bishop of that City, not to leave his Diocess, he was prevail'd upon, by the request of that Prelate, and chose for the place of his abode, a dismal solitude call'd Premontre, where he retir'd A. D. 1120. and there founded the Order of Regular Canons which bears that Name, and which was confirm'd five Years after, by Pope Honorius II. in 1126. Some time after, St. Norbert was sent for to Antwerp to confute Tanchelin or Tanchelm, accus'd of Heresie, and was constrain'd the next Year to accept of the Arch-bishoprick of Magdeburg. He assisted in the Council held at Rheims, A. D. 1131. in favour of Innocent II. took a Journey to Rome, when that Pope was re-established by the Emperor Lotharius, and died in 1134.

There

There is only extant a small moral Discourse written by him in form of an Exhortation, and directed to the Monks of his Order.

STEPHEN HARDING Abbot of Cîteaux.

ROBERT, Abbot of Molefine, who first founded the Monastery of Cîteaux, A.D. 1098. with 21 Monks of his Abbey, whom he brought into that Solitude, had not long the Government of it; for the next Year, he was oblig'd by the Pope's special Order, to return to his own Monastery. Alberic, who succeeded him, and govern'd Cîteaux, during nine Years and a half, gave no other Rule to his Monks but his Example. Afterwards STEPHEN HARDING descended of a noble Family in England, one of the 21 Monks who came from Molefine with Robert, being chose Abbot of Cîteaux, apply'd himself to the compleating of that Order, and may justly be reputed the Founder of it: For he was the first that held general Chapters of the Convents of the Cistercian Monks and made a kind of Rule, which was common to all those Monasteries. He call'd it the Charter of Charity, and publish'd it in 1119. It was approv'd by Pope Calixtus II. It is divided into Thirty Chapters, which contain the particular Rules to be observ'd by those Monks, and is compriz'd in the Monologia Ordinis Cisterciensis, printed at Antwerp in 1635. and in the Annals of the same Order, printed at Lyons in 1642. There are also extant in the Bibliotheca Cisterciensis, a Treatise call'd, The small beginning of the Cistercian Order: A Sermon on the Death of Alberic: And a Discourse made to St. Bernard, when he receiv'd the Monastick Habit, which bear the name of that Abbot of Cîteaux.

BRUNO Bishop of Segni.

BRUNO of Asti, Canon of the Cathedral Church of that City, and afterwards of that Bruno Bishop of Sienna, went to Rome in the time of Pope Gregory VII. in whose presence he disputed against Berengarius, and by way of recompence, was made Bishop of Segni: He retir'd to Segni Mount Cassin under Paschal II. who was offended at his retreat, and drew him out of that Monastery, to send him in Quality of his Legate into France and Sicily. He govern'd the Abbey of Mount Cassin for some time, but afterwards return'd to his Bishoprick, and died there A.D. 1123.

The Works of this Author were publish'd by Maurus Marchesius, a Monk of Mount Cassin, who caus'd them to be printed in two Tomes at Venice in 1651.

The First contains his Commentaries on the Pentateuch, on the Books of Job, Psalms and Canticles, and on the Revelation of St. John; in which he adheres more to the Moral, than to the other Senses of the Text.

In the Second, are compris'd Forty five Sermons on the Gospels of the whole Year, the greatest part of which were printed under the Name of Eusebius of Emisa and St. Eucherius: A Treatise on the Song of Zachariah: Another of the Incarnation and Burial of Jesus Christ, in which he enquires how long our Saviour continued in the Sepulchre: A Tract to prove the use of Unleaven'd Bread against the Greeks: An Explication of certain Ceremonies of the Church: The Life of Pope Leo IX. A Treatise about the Corruption of the Age, proceeding (as he says) from Simoniack Practices; in which he discourses of the Invalidity of Ordinations made by Simonists, and of those of Persons guilty of that Crime: The Life of St. Peter of Anagnia: Two Letters, viz. One directed to the Bishop of Porto, and the Other to Pope Paschal: Six Books of Sentences or Moral Discourses on divers Subjects, which some have attributed to St. Bruno Founder of the Carthusian Order, and which Marchesius restor'd to Bruno of Segni upon the Credit of Petrus Diaconus, by reason of the conformity of the Style, and in regard that the Author of these Discourses makes it appear, that he observ'd St. Benedict's Rule, and that he wrote on the Apocalypse.

To these Works are annexed a Commentary on the Book of Psalms, by ODO a Benedictin Monk of Asti, dedicated to Bruno of Segni.

The Treatise of the Sacraments or Rights of the Church, by Bruno Bishop of Segni, were published by Father Luke Dachery, in the Twelfth Tome of the Spicilegium, as a new Piece, although it was printed in the Venice Edition.

MARBODUS Bishop of Rennes.

Marbodus
Bishop of Rennes.

MARBODUS, flourish'd at Angers in the end of the preceding Century in quality of Canon, Arch-deacon and principal Matter of the Schools of that Church. Afterwards he was nominated for the Bishoprick of Rennes by Pope Urban II. was ordain'd in the Council of Tours, A.D. 1096. and govern'd that Church during twenty eight Years. When he perceiv'd himself to draw near his end, he left his Bishoprick, and retir'd to the Monastery of St. Aubin at Angers, where he assum'd the Habit of St. Benedict, and d'ed in the beginning of the Month of September, A.D. 1123. Sigebert assures us that he wrote a Commentary on the Book of Canticles, but it is no longer extant.

Marbodus compos'd divers Poetical Works Printed at Rennes, in 1524. in which Edition are to be found certain Hymns on Mary Magdalen: Three Prayers to God: One to the Virgin Mary: Several Epigrams and Letters in Verse: Divers moral Poems: A Piece on the casting away of Jonas: Another on the Martyrdom of the Maccabees: The Passions of divers Martyrs in Verse: The Life of St. Maurillus of Angers in Verse: Sixty Poetical Pieces on the precious Stones, and on other Subjects: Ten other Poetical Pieces on the following Subjects, viz. on the manner of Writing; on Time; on Eternity; against lewd Women; in commendation of virtuous Women; on Old Age; against those who imagine that the Stars have any influence over the Bodies of Men; against Voluptuousness; on true Friendship, and on the Advantages of Death and of the Resurrection.

These Poems are follow'd by six Letters, in the First of which directed to Renaud Bishop of Angers, Marbodus complains, That that Prelate after having persecuted and tradu'd him, publickly condemn'd him, for writing to the Pope, that the disturbances rais'd by the Bishop of Angers hinder'd him from going to Rome. He upbraids him with the Services he did him, in causing him to be chosen Bishop, and the assistance he gave him in expediting his Journey to Rome, to get his Election confirm'd; that in stead of a grateful acknowledgment of that Kindness, he was no sooner return'd from Rome, but he depriv'd him of those Favours and Privileges, which were granted to him by his Predecessors, without so much as allowing him six Months Respite, to make an honourable retreat; and, that after having made complaint of his being treated so unworthily, the Bishop of Angers cited him to Rome, knowing that he was not in a condition to go thither; obtain'd power to condemn him, and actually pronounc'd Sentence against him under colour, that he had receiv'd Induction into two Churches. After having thus smartly reprehended Renaud, he advises him to moderate his Anger; not to be too far transported with the heat of his Youth; to have a greater respect for his Elders; and to take care lest his irregular Conduct should verifie the report given out by some Persons, viz. that Prosperity and the high Station to which he aspir'd, had sufficiently discover'd the corruption of his Manners. Mutatus adds, that he does not give him this Admonition to the end that he might be more favourable to him, but lest he should abuse his Authority in treating others after the same manner.

The second Letter is directed to Robert d' Arviselles, whom he reproves, as Geffrey of Vendome had done, for keeping too familiar a correspondence with Women, and for suffering Men and Women to cohabit together. He represents to him the danger of that intimate Converse, and the Scandal that it might occasion. He likewise blames him for wearing a torn Garment, as not being suitable to the Profession of a Regular Canon, which he embrac'd at first, or to the Sacerdotal Dignity, to which he was afterwards advanced. He accuses him of affecting singularity in that particular, and advises him to resume the Habit of a Regular Canon, and to return to his former course of Life. But he is much more offended at him for taking upon him to reprove the Vices of absent Clergy-men in his Sermons, and for inveighing against certain Orders and Persons of great Eminency: He affirms, that that serves only to bring Superiors into contempt, to subvert the order of the Church, and even to induce many to believe, that his design in declaiming against others, was only to gain popular Applause. He declares at the same time, that altho' he had a better Opinion of him, yet it cannot be deny'd that his Preaching has the same effect, and that many of his Hearers abandon their Cures and refuse to receive the Sacraments from them, or to pay them Tithes; whereas they run after him incessantly, being excited by Curiosity and an inclination to Novelty rather than a true principle of Piety; since it does not appear, that there is any manner of reformation in their Lives and Conversations: Lastly, he rebukes him, for giving the Monastick Habit, to all those who being mov'd by his Sermons, were desirous to receive it, without making any trial of their integrity and constancy, as also in regard that he took no care, that they should be thoroughly converted, provided the number of his Followers were encreas'd: That after they had once given in their Names, he took no farther cognizance of their Affairs, but left them at liberty to act as they thought fit: That some of them met together, and ran about the Towns and Countries, cloathed with Habits of several Colours, wearing long Beards, and walking bare-footed: And that when they were ask'd who they were, they made Answer,

That

That they belong'd to their Master. Our Author is unwilling, to impute to him the Extravagances committed by those People, but observes it to be a matter of dangerous Consequence, that they should thus make use of his Authority for a cloke to their Folly, and call themselves his Disciples.

As for the Nuns which Robert d' Arbriffelles in like manner caus'd to be shut up in Cells; without any Probation, he says, that some of them broke thro' the Passages to make their Escape, and that others were brought to Bed in their Apartments, which would not have happen'd (continues he) if the prudence of the Governor, had made a trial of their Strength. He concludes with remonstrating to him, that he was censur'd for quitting the Canonical Life which he had embrac'd, and for leaving the Monastery, where he had made a Vow of Constancy, and where he was constituted Superiour of his Colleagues, to lead an extraordinary kind of Life, and to take upon him the Government of a Nunnery. Therefore Marbodus demands of him a satisfactory Answer, as to those particular Articles, otherwise he declares that he should have very good reason to doubt of his Salvation. 'Tis probable, that Robert d' Arbriffelles clear'd himself from these Imputations that were laid upon him, even to our Author's satisfaction; but there is no likelihood, that th's Letter was Forg'd, as Father Mabillon has asserted. In a certain Manuscript of the Abbey of St. Victor, it is attributed to Hildebert Arch-bishop of Tours, nevertheless the style comes nearer to Marbodus's manner of Expression than to, that of the former.

In the third Letter, he reproves a certain Hermit nam'd Ingilquier, and those of his Congregation for their indiscreet Zeal against unworthy Priests, with which they were transported too far; inasmuch that they not only refus'd to assist at their Oblations, but also forbid the Laicks to receive the Sacraments from their Hands. He shews by many Passages of St. Augustin, that the Sacraments may be duly administer'd by unworthy Priests, and that they ought not to be despis'd by reason of the unworthiness of those who administer them. The Hermit having return'd for Answer, that he did by no means recede from the Doctrine of the Church relating to the validity of the Sacraments administer'd by unworthy Priests, but that he was perswaded that Hereticks ought to be shun'd, and that Priests guilty of Fornication ought to be depos'd; Marbodus replies in his fourth Letter, that he is of his Opinion, but that he conceives that it does not belong to every one to try or Condemn them and that it ought only to be done according to the Rules of the Church. Therefore he advises those Hermits, to reprehend such Offenders with gentleness; to pray for them; and to accuse them (if they shall think fit) before competent Judges who have a right to bring them to their Trial; to the end that they may be depos'd if they be convicted, or confess their Crime.

The Fifth is a request that he makes to Vitalis, the Founder of a Nunnery to receive a certain poor Orphan, who altho' she was well instructed in matters of Religion, yet could have no hopes of being admitted into the old Monasteries, where, by an ill Custom, that was then too common, Money was prefer'd before Learning and Piety.

The last Letter is directed to a Nun nam'd Agenorida, to whom he gives a great deal of wholesome Advice, for her instruction in the Christian course of Life and religious Exercises.

These are all the Works that are contain'd in the old Edition of Marbodus, which is become very scarce. His Copies of Verses are not very elegant, nor of a very Poetical strain, but comprise many judicious and solid Notions. His Letters are accurately written, and full of good Maxims and Passages of the Holy Scripture and the Fathers, admirably well apply'd. The Monks of St. Aubin at Angers, wrote a Circular Letter, to give notice of his Death, according to the Custom of the Order of St. Benedict, in which they celebrate his Praise, and Ulger Bishop of Angers likewise wrote a Copy of Verses in his Commendation: These two Monuments are prefix'd to Marbodus's Works.

ARNULPHUS Bishop of Lisieux.

ARNOUL or ARNULPHUS, Bishop of Lisieux, Arch-deacon of Seez, was install'd in the Bishoprick of Lisieux, A. D. 1141. and in 1147. accompany'd Lewes surnam'd the Young King of France in his Expedition to the Holy Land. In 1160. he was sent into England by Pope Alexander III. in quality of his Legate, and afterwards employ'd in the Negotiations between King Henry II. and Thomas Becket Arch-bishop of Canterbury; but having too obstinately taken part with the latter, he incur'd the King's displeasure, and was oblig'd to retire in 1180. to the Monastery of St. Victor near Paris, where he died August 11. A. D. 1182.

This Arnulphus made a Collection of his own Letters at the request of Gilles Arch-bishop of Rom, to whom he Dedicates them by his first Letter. These are written in a fine Style, being full of ingenious Notions and moral Sentences, which render them both useful and delightful. There are many that contain only Compliments, or relate to certain private Concerns; but there are others about Ecclesiastical Affairs, comprehending divers Points of Discipline, particularly, those directed to Pope Adrian IV. in the First of which, this Bishop recommends to him the doing Justice to a certain Person, who had recourse to the See of Rome, to get satisfaction for the ill treatment he had receiv'd in his own Country, where he could not obtain any relief of his Diocesan. Arnulphus observes in that Letter, that People began not to have the same Respect for the Holy See as formerly, and that those who appeal'd to it, were so far from getting their Grievances redress'd, that they were more injuriously treated than before, which beset him in whose favour he wrote, who had no sooner enter'd an Appeal, but he was put in Prison; neither could he procure his liberty, but by paying a Sum of Money to his Persecutor, and by submitting to the Bishop's Sentence. Therefore he exhorts the Pope to revenge the Indignity, by reason that if they were suffer'd thus to elude the Decisions of the Holy See, its Protection would become altogether unprofitable.

In another Letter directed to the same Pope, he entreats him to send back the Bishop of Baieux, whose presence was much wanted in his Diocess, where he had done a great deal of good.

He wrote again to that Pope, about the Contest that arose between the Abbot and the Monks of Jumièges. Those Monks had accus'd their Abbot of many Crimes, and more especially of Incontinency, and divers Witnesses had made Depositions against him, but they gave their Testimony about different matters of Fact, so that there was not any compleat positive Proof against him, because every Fact was prov'd only by one single Witness. Whereupon Arnulphus admitted him to clear himself by his own Oath, and by that of three Abbots and three Monks of known Probity. The Monks appeal'd from his Court to the See of Rome, and demanded Letters of Reference, which he calls Apostolos (this is the first time I met with this Term in that Signification.) He acquaints Pope Adrian, that he had granted their Request, and that in the mean while, he order'd both Parties to do nothing, that might tend to the prejudice of the Appeal.

He likewise wrote to the Abbot of St. Evrou, that he was oblig'd to discharge the Debts that were actually contracted by his Predecessors, and threatens to suspend him, unless he gives satisfaction to his Creditors before Whitsontide. He enjoins that Abbot by another Letter, under pain of Suspension, to re-admit a certain Monk, whom he had turn'd out of his Monastery, without hearing what he alledg'd in his own Defence.

In another Letter to William Bishop of Mans, he desires him to appoint another Place in stead of Poitiers, for the Trial of the Treasurer of Rouen; because he would be oblig'd to take a much longer Journey thither, than his Adversary, who was nearer that City.

Arnulphus being at variance with a certain Lord, who refus'd to acknowledg his Jurisdiction, it was order'd by the Legates of the See of Rome, That the said Lord should restore what he had taken from him; that he should cause satisfaction to be made by those of his Vassals, who were excommunicated; that he should make a due presentation of a Priest to govern that Church and People, under his Authority, as belonging to his Diocess. The Nobleman offer'd Arnulphus to present a Priest to him by the Hands of Hugh Arch-bishop of Rouen; but Arnulphus reply'd to that Arch-bishop, who made him the Proposal, That if matters were so order'd, it might be taken for granted, that the possession of that Place was not adjudg'd to him, but † Peititoire. only resign'd by way of sequestration, which would be prejudicial to his Right, when the Claim should come to be debated: Besides that 'twas not sufficient to present a Priest to him, but that 'twas requisite that every thing which was ordain'd, should be effectually put in Execution: Lastly, as for the rest, that if they were willing to come to such an Agreement, as would entirely put an end to the Difference, he would readily take such Measures, as should be judg'd most expedient; but that 'twas not reasonable, for him to supply his Adversary with Arms, who was preparing with all his might for the Encounter.

The Schism that happen'd in the Church of Rome after the Death of Pope Adrian IV. between Alexander III. and Ottavian, gave occasion to Arnulphus to write many Letters; the First of which is directed to Alexander III. to congratulate his Election. He assures him in that Letter, That God, who never abandons his Church, altho' he suffers it to be sometimes Persecuted; would give him the Victory over his Enemies, and put him in the peaceable possession of the Holy See, as he had done Pope Innocent, altho' he had a more formidable and a more potent Antagonist than Ottavian: He expresses the great Joy he had at his Promotion, and gives him to understand, that he had taken care to prepossess the King his Master (meaning Henry II. King of England) with respect to that Affair, and to make him sensible of the validity of his Election, and of the Deficiency of that of his Adversary; That upon his Testimony that Prince had declar'd for him, and had promis'd with a great deal of satisfaction, that he would not acknowledg any other Pope; That having afterwards receiv'd a Letter from the Emperor, who entreated him to defer the declaring in his favour, he had superseded the publishing of his Declaration; but that he still persisted in his former Resolution, and that whatever course the Emperor might take, he would not follow him, if he did not find it expedient.

Pope Alexander reply'd to Arnulphus, That he was very sensible of the Affection that he express'd towards him in his Letter; that he had caus'd it to be read publicly as a proof of the sincerity of his Intentions and of his Eloquence; that he was not ignorant by what means an end was put to the Schism which arose in the time of Pope Innocent; that he hop'd that thro' the divine Assistance, the Storm which at present disturb'd the tranquillity of the Church of Rome, would ere long be dispers'd; that he gave Thanks to God, that King Henry continu'd strenuously to maintain the Unity of the Church; that he entreated him to use his best Interests with his Majesty to hinder the frequent solicitations of the Emperor from obliging him to alter his Mind; and that to that purpose he thought fit to nominate him his Nuncio in the Court

Court of that Prince, with Authority over the Bishops of his Dominions. He acquaints him, That the Emperor Frederic never ceas'd, since his accession to the Imperial Crown, to persecute and oppress the Church of Rome; that in Adrian's Life-time he caus'd the Prelates, who were returning from Rome, to be taken Prisoners; that he misus'd the Legates of the Holy See; that he seiz'd on the Revenues belonging to the Church of Rome; and that he us'd his utmost efforts to expel Adrian, and to cause Ostavian to be made Pope in his stead: That what he was not able to put in execution, whilst that Pope was yet living, he endeavour'd to compass, after his death, by favouring the intrusion of that Man, who attempted to get possession of the Holy See, and whose usurpation was abetted only by three Prelates, to the prejudice of the Canonical Election of himself, which was carry'd on by the others in due Form: That to maintain it, he call'd an Assembly of the Prelates at Pavia, and that Ostavian resign'd the Marks of the Papal Dignity in his Presence: That the Emperor afterwards restor'd 'em to him, invest'd him with the Pontifical Habits and Ornaments, particularly with the Ring and Crosier-staff, and by force constrain'd the Bishops of that Council to own him as Pope. Lastly, he further informs Arnulphus, that he had actually excommunicated Frederic and his Adherents.

Arnulphus having receiv'd this Letter, wrote one to the Arch-bishops and Bishops of England, to make 'em sensible of the Justice of Alexander's Cause. He says, That if the Persons of the two Competitours be compar'd, it will appear, that Alexander is endu'd with all the accomplishments of Learning and Vertue, that can be wish'd for in a Prelate; whereas his Adversary has no other personal Merits to recommend him but his Quality; and if the two Elections be duely examin'd, one may be soon convinc'd, that that of Alexander, is regular, solemn and reasonable, and that that of the other, on the contrary, is rash and altogether unreasonable. "For can it be affirm'd (says he) that an Election manag'd by a single Bishop and two Cardinals, ought to be set up in opposition to the Authority of the whole Church? Or that a precarious Consecration made by a few private Persons, ought to be preferr'd to that which was perform'd with the requisite Solemnities, and with the general approbation of all the People? Can Ostavian's Proceedings be justify'd, who assum'd the Pontifical Habits, who by an unheard of rashness plac'd himself in St. Peter's Chair, and seiz'd on the Palace, whilst Alexander chosen with an unanimous Consent refus'd, thro' Humility and Modesty, to accept of that Dignity? Or can the violence that Ostavian afterwards offer'd, in besieging Alexander and his Electors with armed Men give him any manner of Right or Title? Or could he under that pretence averr, that he was in possession of the Holy See nine Days before Alexander? Indeed the latter was chosen by the Senate, and conducted to the Ward-robe, where the Pontifical Habits were kept: He was also ordain'd by the Bishop of Ostia, to whom the Right of consecrating the Popes legally belongs; he was acknowledged by the Legates, who resided in different Countries; and the whole Church would have continu'd in Peace; if his Adversary had not fled for refuge to the Emperor, whom he knew to be ready to afford him his Assistance. He adds, That that Prince was glad to meet with so fair an opportunity, which he sought for after the example of his Predecessours, who had long ago form'd a Design to bring the Church of Rome under subjection to their Dominion, and upon that account favour'd the Schismatics, and excited Divisions in that City: That Ostavian had absolutely made him the Master of his Fortune; that he laid the Marks of the Pontifical Dignity at his Feet; and that he afterwards receiv'd from him the Investiture of the Church of Rome, by the Ring and Staff, causing the Imperial secular Power to triumph over the Priesthood: That the Emperor call'd a Council to confirm that Choice, and compell'd the Bishops by force to sign a Writing, by which they own'd Ostavian as lawful Pope: That that Writing was full of manifest Untruths, and that the Bishops could not by their definitive Sentence render an Election valid, that was null in its Original. Besides that the Gallican Church which always had the good fortune to maintain Justice and Truth, and to afford a Sanctuary to the Popes when persecuted by the German Princes, after having examin'd the Elections of Alexander and Ostavian in a Council call'd by the King's Order, for that purpose, had determin'd in favour of the former; but that the King had prudently defer'd the Publication of that Resolution, by reason of the union between him and the King of England, to the end that they might act jointly together: That the latter had in like manner sufficiently declar'd on Alexander's behalf, in regard that he receiv'd his Letters, and more especially protested, that he would not own any other Pope, having also rejected those of Ostavian. In the mean while, he admonish'd them to take care that Injustice might not prevail over the Truth, through the sinister practices of some English Noble-men, who gave it out, that they were related to Ostavian, and exhorted them, when ever they met together, strenuously to maintain the Truth without fear of offending those Opponents.

In another Letter written to the Cardinals, he gives a particular account of divers remarkable Circumstances of the Elections of Alexander and Ostavian, viz. That the Bishop of Frascati, who was the first of the three Electors of the latter, being a voluptuous Man, took great delight in Feasting, and soon retir'd from the Conclave because Dinner-time drew near: That one of the two others took it ill, that he was deny'd the Office of Chancellor, and that the third was Ostavian's Kinsman: That as soon as those three had given their Votes for him, he himself took the Cope, and threw it over his Shoulders with so great Precipitation, that that part which ought to lie on the Neck, fell to the Ground; that he got upon the Papal Throne in that Equipage; and that having caus'd the Doors of the Church to be set open, it was immediately fill'd with his Guards, who conducted him to the Palace: That the King of France call'd an Assembly of the Estates of the Realm, as well of the Clergy as of the Nobility, to determine which of the two Elections ought to be ratify'd: That some were of Opinion, that nothing should be done in a hurry about an Affair of that importance, and that it ought to be deferr'd for some time longer, because it was dangerous to excite a mis-understanding between the King and the Emperor upon that account: That they also added, that the Church of Rome was always burdensome to Princes; that 'twas requisite to shake off the Yoke, since so fair an Occasion offer'd it self to that purpose; that the Death of the two Competitors would put an end to the Contest; and that the Government of the Bishops might be sufficient, till God should more clearly make known his Will: Lastly, that the Respect due to the Emperor's Ambassadors, who were present, and to the King of England, whose Sentiments the King of France declar'd himself ready to follow, caus'd those Measures to be taken in the Assembly. Arnulphus, in the end of this Letter, advises the Cardinals not to exasperate the King of England by their Threats, but to pacifie him, since the Obedience of the Kingdoms of England, France, Spain, Ireland and Norway depended on his Declaration.

Although Arnulphus had done such notable Services to Alexander III. nevertheless that Pope, upon the Accusations brought against him by Sylvester, Treasurer of his Church, and by John, Nephew to the Bishop of Seez, did not forbear to nominate the Bishops of Mans and Auranches Commissioners, to take cognizance of that Cause. Arnulphus appear'd before them, and William Bishop of Paris and Cardinal, was present at the Tryal. The Treasurer own'd before the Judges, the Falshood of the Complaints that he had made against his Diocesan, and promis'd that he would not renew them for the future. John still maintain'd what he had averr'd, but the Sentence not being favourable to him, he appeal'd from that Court to the See of Rome, although the Pope gave Commission to the two Bishops to pass Judgment without any Appeal. However Arnulphus, who upon that account might have exempted himself from going to Rome, and might have refus'd to suffer his Cause to be tried again there; after having inform'd the Pope of the manner of the Proceedings, assur'd his Holiness, that he would repair to Rome, as soon as it was possible, and entreated him to detain John till he arriv'd, to shew how that Person and the Bishop of Seez his Uncle, have committed a Trespass against the Church and the Holy See.

He explains this in the following Letter directed to Alexander. One of his Relations was sometime Bishop of Seez, who substituted Regular Canons in that Church in the room of Secular. This Reformation was approv'd by the Popes Honorius II. Eugenius III. and Adrian III. and by Henry II. King of England, who made them a Donation. These Canons were to have all their Goods in Common, according to their Original Institution, and the Bishops his Successors were likewise oblig'd, before they were install'd, to maintain that Settlement. The Bishop then incumbent, design'd to ruine it, or at least to obtain a License of the Pope, to confer the Arch-deaconries on Lay-men, that he might have wherewithal to bestow on his Nephews and Relations. Arnulphus sent word to the Pope, That that Bishop palliated his Carnal Affections with the pretence of Piety; giving it out, That there was not any Person in that Diocese, capable of performing those Functions; as if the Simplicity of the Canons were not to be prefer'd to the worldly Wisdom of others; or in case there were none to be found at Seez, worthy of possessing those Benefices, some might not be taken out of the Church of St. Victor and St. Rufus. He adds, that having been Arch-deacon of Seez, and educated in that Church, he thought himself oblig'd to maintain its Rights and Privileges, and that for that reason, he judg'd it expedient to certifie his Holiness thereof by a Letter.

Notwithstanding this Information, the Pope granted to the Bishop of Seez a License to Secularize his Arch-deaconry; but Arnulphus wrote a very smart Letter to him on that Subject, in which he remonstrates, That he had no Authority thus to abolish an Institution made by his Predecessors, under colour that they could not impose Laws on their Successors: He maintains, That that Maxim is false, and that it tends to the ruin of all the Establishments of the Saints: That the Privileges of the Popes of Rome, are as it were Testaments, which are not made void, but rather confirm'd by the death of the Testators: That 'tis true indeed, that the Errors of Predecessors may be corrected by their Successors, and that the latter may make some alteration for the better in the Sanctions of the others, when 'tis requisite for the publick Advantage, and when it may be done without any detriment to Religion: That for that very reason, Secular Canons may be chang'd into Regular, because the Order of the latter is more perfect; but a more strict Institution cannot be chang'd into one less perfect; by which means Remissness in Discipline would be authoriz'd: And lastly, that there are some Persons so prodigal of Dispensations, that they retain nothing as an unalterable Law, and Sacrifice every thing to the Interests and inordinate Passions of private Men. He reproves the Pope for not shewing sufficient Constancy in maintaining the Rights of the Church; and gives him to understand, that he had scandaliz'd it by revoking the Sentence of Excommunication, denounc'd by his Predecessors against Laicks who shall attempt to get themselves admitted into the Chapter of Sceæ; by adjudging to a Layman all the Revenues of the Arch-deaconry that the Regular Canons enjoy'd in Common, and part of which they distributed to the Poor; and by permitting a Man, adorn'd with gorgeous Apparel to take place amongst the Canons cloath'd in Sack-cloth. He adds, That 'tis further to be fear'd, lest the Arch-deaconry should be left vacant, by reason that it is already appointed for another young Nephew, when he sha. be of Age: That in the mean while, the Bishop has turn'd out the Prior of the Canons, and substituted a Person of no Repute in his Place, to the end that he might make himself Master of the Church-Revenues. Therefore he exhorts the Pope to revoke what was extorted from him by surprize, in order to re-establish the Rule in that Chapter, and to put an end to the Complaints and Murmurs occasion'd by that Innovation.

The four following Letters are directed to the same Pope, and contain an account of particular Affairs. In the last he acquaints him, That the King of England was dissatisfied with his Holiness, because he deny'd him those Favours he su'd for at Rome.

He congratulates in another, Gilbert Bishop of London, in regard that the Pope had ordain'd, that his Cause should be decided without an Appeal, and observes that Appeals to Rome often put false Accusers in a Capacity to oppress innocent Persons, and give them an opportunity to avoid the Punishment due to their Crimes,

In another Letter, he reproves a certain Abbot for leaving his Monastery to solicit Law-suits at Court, and enjoyns him to return thither.

In a Letter that he wrote to Henry Cardinal Bishop of Pisa, sending him the Works of Ennodius; he passes a very disadvantageous Judgment on that Author:

In his Letter to the Bishop of Angoulême, he determines that the Engagements that a certain Child was under, whom his Uncle had bound to a Clerk, upon Payment of a Sum of Money, ought not to be ratify'd, and that that Bishop cannot suffer the said Child to be detain'd by him.

In a Letter written to Arnold Abbot of Bonneval, he treats of the Usefulness of the Sacrifice of the Mass. "Nothing (says he) can be offer'd up more precious than JESUS CHRIST; nothing more efficacious than this Sacrifice; nothing more advantageous both to him who offers it, and to him for whom 'tis offer'd, if the unworthiness of the Persons doth not render it unprofitable: 'Tis requisite that he who offers it have pure Hands, and that he, for whom it is offer'd, should know the Value of it by Faith; that he should earnestly desire it; and that he should embrace it with a perfect Charity. Oh, how great is this Benefit, which is sufficient for the Person who receives it, and for him that administers it: For how extensive soever the Priest's Charity may be towards certain Persons, this Sacrifice remains altogether entire for every one in particular. It is communicated to many, so as its Efficacy is not diminish'd, with respect to every Individual; and altho' different Persons partake of it, yet it does not suffer any Division. Quoscunque enim Sacerdos effusa charitatis latitudine complectatur, totum simul omnium, totum uniuscujusque est Singillatim, nec integritatem dividit communicatio plurium, nec soliditatem minuit participatio diversorum.

He has also inserted amongst his Letters, a Discourse that he made in the Council of Tours, A. D. 1163. in the presence, and by the Order of Pope Alexander III. In the beginning of it he says, that there are three Qualities requisite in a Preacher, viz. Sanctity of Life, to procure respect for what he delivers; a perfect Knowledge, to be capable of teaching the necessary Truths; and Eloquence to cause them to be approv'd, to the end that his Sermons may be Holy, Learned and Sublime. In the Body of this Sermon, he treats of the Unity and Liberty of the Church, shewing that those two Qualities are necessary therein, and that the Ministers ought to use their utmost endeavours to maintain them, more especially at a time when both are attack'd; that is to say, the former by the Ambition of Schismatics, and the other by the Oppression of Tyrants: That nevertheless, 'tis impossible that either should compass their Design: For although the former separate themselves from the Communion of the Church, yet it is not divided by that means, but the Chaff is only separated from the Wheat; and although the latter seizes on the Temporal Revenues of the Church, nevertheless it does not cease to be free, and to exercise its Power with Spiritual Authority. However, that the Bishops ought to make use of all possible means to re-unite the former to the Communion of the Church, and to oblige the others to quit their unjust Claim to the Ecclesiastical Revenues. This is the Subject of a long and very pathetic Exhortation made by him to the Bishops of the Council; and in the sequel of the same Discourse, he wishes that the Emperor would humble himself under the Almighty Hand of God; that he would acknowledge that the Dominion of the Church is above his, and that he would submit to the Sec of Rome, which conferr'd the Empire on his Predecessors. He observes that Bishops may possess large Revenues, provided they do not take themselves to be the Proprietors, but only the Dispensers of them, and are perswaded that the Patrimony of JESUS CHRIST is the Inheritance of the Poor, which ought to be distributed to them, and that they who put it to another use are to be look'd upon as Robbers.

This Discourse is follow'd by another, pronounc'd in a Synod held for the Ordination of a Bishop. He begins with the Commendation of the Church, and afterwards rejects the Person of Girard, who was propos'd, alledging, That although there was a form of Election in his favour, nevertheless he ought not to be ordain'd, by reason that it is not to be endur'd that the Liberty of Elections, which was introduc'd for the Benefit of the Churches, should be made prejudicial to them, and therefore that the Election of Girard was null as having been carry'd on only by some few Persons devoted to his Interest.

He acquaints that Pope in another Letter, That he had pass'd Sentence in favour of Hugh Abbot of Senlis, in a Cause that was depending between that Abbot and Garnier a Priest, concerning the Church of Marine, for the Tryal of which he was nominat'd a Commissioner with Henry Bishop of Senlis. He likewise gave him notice in the following Letter, that the King of England had favourably receiv'd his Letters and Nuncio's, and that he had re-instat'd the Arch-bishop of Canterbury; but he complains that the Nuncio's did not promote the making of Peace, and entreats the Pope to do it.

In another Letter, he informs the same Pope, That he had put an end to the Contest between the Abbot of La Couture and Hermier the Priest, about the Church of Breule.

In one of the Letters directed to the Pope's Legates, Albert and Theodin, he determines, That it is not expedient to bestow Altars, that is to say, Benefices on the Sons of Priests, lest it should occasion disorders.

Afterwards he writes to Pope Alexander against those Monks, who refuse to obey their Bishop, and claim a right to retain Cures and Tithes.

He complains in particular of the Abbot of St. Evrou, who presum'd to celebrate Divine Service; notwithstanding the Sentence of Suspension he had pronounc'd against him.

The Poems of this Author are not very considerable as to the Subjects, but they are exact in reference to the Rules of Poetry, and the Verses are very fine. The first is on the Nativity of Jesus Christ, the second is an Encomium of the Bishop of Windsor; and the rest on the alteration of the Seasons, and on some other profane Subjects. There are also two Epitaphs of Queen Mathilda, one of Algarus Bishop of Coutances, and another of Hugh Arch-bishop of Roan.

Father Dachery has publish'd in the second Tome of his Spicilegium, an excellent Discourse dedicated to Geffrey Bishop of Chartres, and compos'd by Arnulphus, when as yet Arch-deacon of Seoix, against Peter de Leon the Antipope, and Gerard Bishop of Angoulesme his Legat. It is written with a great deal of earnestness and energy, so that the Author gives us a very lively description of the Irregularities and Vices of that Antipope and of his Legate; maintains the Election and Proceedings of Innocent II. and makes it appear that the latter is the true Pope.

Father Dachery has likewise set forth in the end of the Thirteenth Tome of the Spicilegium, a Sermon upon the Annunciation of the Virgin Mary, and five Letters by the same Author.

The other Works of Arnulphus, Bishop of Lisieux, were printed at Paris, from a Manuscript of Adrian Turnebus's Library, A. D. 1585. and afterwards in the Bibliotheca Patrum.

PETER de CELLES Bishop of Chartres.

Peter de Celles Bi-
Chartres.

PETER, surnam'd de Celles, from the Name of his first Abbey, commonly call'd Monstier-la-Celle, in the Suburbs of the City of Troyes, was descended of an honourable Family of Champagne. He apply'd himself to Study at Paris, and was apparently a Novice in the Monastery of St. Martin des Champs. He was chosen Abbot of Celles, A. D. 1150. translated from thence to the Abbey of St. Remy at Rheims in 1162. and at last made Bishop of Chartres in 1182. in the place of John of Salisbury. After having govern'd that Church during five Years, he died Feb. 17. 1187.

The following Works of this Author, were collected and publish'd by Father Ambrosius Januarius, of the Congregation of St. Maur, and printed by Lewis Billaine in 1671. But the first of his Works is a Course of Sermons on all the Festivals of the Year, which were never as yet printed. However, notwithstanding the Reputation they might have in his time, Father Januarius observes, that they are weak, and that Peter de Celles is not very solicitous to prove a Truth thoroughly, but passes lightly over from one Subject to another; although his Writings are full of pious Conceptions, Flowers of Scripture and very useful Instructions. He might also take notice, that they are full of Puns, affected Antitheses, sorry Allusions, mean Descriptions and Notions, which have not all the Gravity that is requisite in Discourses of that Nature. In his Eighth Sermon on the Lord's Supper, we find the Term of Transubstantiation, which is also in Stephen Bishop of Autun, who liv'd in the same Century: And indeed, those two Authors are the first that made use of it. The three Books of Bread, dedicated to John of Salisbury, contain a great number of mystical Reflections tions on all the sorts of Bread mention'd in the Holy Scripture. The Mystical and Moral Exposition of the Tabernacle is a Work almost of the same Nature. The Treatise of Conscience, dedicated to Aliber the Monk, relates altogether to Piety, and that of the Discipline of the Cloister, comprehends many Moral Instructions in the Exercises of the Monastic Life, which he follow'd above Thirty Years. This Piece was set forth by Father Dachery, in the third Tome of his Spicilegium.

The last Work in this Edition, is a Collection of the Letters of Peter de Celles, which were already publish'd with Notes by Father Sirmondus, A. D. 1613. They are divided into nine Books, and relate either to pious Subjects or to certain particular Affairs, or are merely Complimental. Indeed, they are written with greater Accuracy than his other Works, being of a more natural and less affected Style; nevertheless they are full of verbal Quibbles and Puns. In this Collection are three Letters on the Festival of the Conception of the Virgin Mary, in which Peter de Celles strenuously maintains St. Bernard's Sentiments on that Subject. NICOLAS, a Monk of St. Alban, was of a contrary Opinion, and averr'd, That Nicolas the blessed Virgin was never obnoxious to Sin. This is the Subject of the Twenty third Letter of the Sixth Book; but the Monk vindicates his Opinion in the Ninth Letter of the last Book, and confutes that of St. Bernard, yet not without expressing a great deal of Respect for the Person of that Saint. However, he does not treat Peter de Celles with the same Moderation, who being nettled, returns him a somewhat sharp Answer in the Tenth Letter of the same Book. Peter was then Bishop of Chartres.

JOHN of SALISBURY Bishop of Chartres.

JOHN of Salisbury the intimate Friend of Thomas Becket Arch-bishop of Canterbury, and his Companion during his Exile, was at last made Bishop of Chartres, A. D. 1179. and died three Years after. He was one of the most ingenious, most polite and most learned Men of that Age, as is evident from his Book call'd Policraticon; or, A Discovery of the Fopperies of the Lords of the Court. Justus Lipsius assures us, that many considerable pieces of Purple and Fragments of a better Age, are to be found in that Work: Peter of Blois in like manner declares that he was even charm'd with it, having discover'd therein a well regulated sort of Learning and abundance of Things, the Variety of which renders them extremely delightful. And indeed, 'tis an excellent Work, treating of the Employments, Occupations, Functions, Vertues and Vices of the Men of the World, but more especially of Princes, Potentates and great Lords; in which is contain'd a vast Treasure of Moral Notions, Sentences, fine Passages of Authors, Examples, Apologues, Extracts of History, common Places, &c. 'Tis divided into Eight Books, and compos'd in a plain and concise Style.

But this Style is more proper for the numerous Letters which the same Author wrote to the Popes Adrian and Alexander; to the Kings of England and divers other Princes; to Thomas Becket Arch-bishop of Canterbury; to several English Bishops; and to many other Persons; either about general Occurrences and Transactions, as the Schism of Osavian the Antipope, and the Election of Alexander III. the contest between the Pope and the Emperor Frederick; and that between the King of England and the Arch-bishop of Canterbury; or relating to particular Affairs of the Churches of England; or to certain Points of Doctrine and Discipline: As the 172d Letter concerning the Number of Writers of the Canonical Books of the Old and New Testament; the 67th about the nullity of a second Marriage which a certain Woman had contracted after she was divorc'd from her former Husband who was a Priest; the 68th about the cohabitation of Women with Clerks; and the 69th about the Sums of Money that were exacted of the Vicars of Churches. In these Letters he appears to be much addicted to the Interest of Thomas of Canterbury, whose conduct nevertheless he sometimes censures, and seems likewise to be much devoted to the Pope's Service, although he does not always approve every thing that is done at Rome, and condemns the Vices of the Cardinals on certain Occasions. He openly approves the deposing of the Emperor Frederick, and the Proceedings of Pope Alexander against him. His Letters are full of Allusions to the Sacred History, and of Examples taken out of Holy Scripture; in which he also intermixes many Passages of Profane Authors. The number of these Letters amounts to 301: and they were printed at Paris, A. D. 1611. with the Life of Thomas Becket Arch-bishop of Canterbury, by the same Author; to whom are likewise attributed certain Commentaries on the Epistles of St. Paul, printed at Amsterdam in 1646.

PETER of BLOIS Arch-Deacon of Bath.

Blois Archdeacon of Bath.

PETER, born'd of Blois, from the Place of his Nativity, deriving his extraction from Bretagne, study'd the Liberal Sciences at Paris; the Civil and Canon Law at Bononia, and after having attain'd to a profound skill in all sorts of Humane Learning, apply'd himself entirely to the Study of Divinity, under the Tuition of John of Salisbury Bishop of Chartres. It is also probable that Peter of Blois was Canon of that City; however, having pass'd into Sicily, A. D. 1167. with Stephen the Son of the Count of Perche, and the Coulin of the Queen of Sicily, he was chosen Tutor and afterwards Secretary to William II. King of Sicily, but he was soon oblig'd to leave that Country, when Stephen Count of Perche, who was made Chancellor of the Kingdom and Arch-bishop of Palermo, was banish'd from thence. Upon his return to France, he was invited over into England by King Henry II. and after having spent some time at Court, he retir'd to the Palace of Richard Arch-bishop of Canterbury, and became his Chancellor. He was sent by that Arch-bishop to King Henry II. and to the Popes Alexander III. and Urban III. to negotiate Affairs relating to the Church of Canterbury, and after the Death of King Henry, he continued for some time in the Court of Queen Eleonora. In the end of his Life, he was depriv'd of the Arch-Deaconry of Bath, which was conferr'd on him at his arrival in England, but some time after, he obtain'd that of London; in the discharging of which Duty, he took a great deal of pains, and enjoy'd only a small Revenue. He died in England A. D. 1200.

Peter de Blois himself made a Collection of his Letters, by the Order of Henry II. King of England, as he intimates in his first Letter directed to that Prince, in which he observes, That they are not all alike; that sometimes the great number of urgent Affairs oblig'd him to write with less accuracy; that sometimes the Subject did not allow him to enlarge; and that sometimes the meanness of the Capacity of those Persons to whom he wrote, constrain'd him to make use of a more plain Style. He excuses himself for citing profane Authors, as also, for speaking freely, and even for presuming to reprove his Prince. He protests, that to the best of his remembrance, he never wrote any thing with a Design to Flatter, but that Integrity and an unfeigned Zeal for maintaining the Truth, always excited him to set Pen to Paper.

The Second is a Letter of Consolation directed to the same King on the Death of his Son Henry III. in which he induces him to hope for the Salvation of that young Prince, who died in a course of Repentance.

In the Third, he severely reprehends a certain great Lord, who had reproach'd his Chaplain with the meanness of his Birth, and gives him to understand, that none ought to be puff'd up, either upon account of Nobility or Riches.

In the Fourth, he congratulates the Prior of Cisteraux upon the Tranquillity he enjoy'd in his Solitude, protesting that he even envy'd his Condition, and entreats the same Prior to remember him in his Prayers and Oblations.

In the Fifth, he reproves Richard the Successor of Thomas Becket in the Arch-bishoprick of Canterbury, for applying himself with greater earnestness to the maintenance of the Temporal Interests of his Church, than to the Spiritual Government of his Diocese; remonstrating, that his Diocesans and Prince are very much scandaliz'd at those Proceedings.

In the Sixth, to wipe off the reproaches that a certain School-Master who undertook to teach the Liberal Sciences, had put upon the Clerks, who live in the Palaces of Bishops; he asserts, That his Profession was more contrary to the Ecclesiastical Function, than the conduct of those Clergy-men.

In the Seventh, he rebukes a Professor, who was addicted to Drunkenness.

In the Eighth, he vindicates the comparison he made of the different States of the Church, to the various Phases or Apparitions of the Moon, and mainrains, that Terms and Maxims of Philosophy and of the Civil Law may be us'd in treating of matters of Religion, when it can be done conveniently.

In the Ninth, he reproves one of his Pupils, who after having compleated his Philological Studies, determin'd to rest for two Years, before he apply'd himself to that of Divinity; and shews, that that negligence would be extremely prejudicial to him.

In the Tenth, written to one of the Chaplains of the King of Sicily, against the Design which that Prince had, to cause to be install'd in the Bishoprick of Agrigento, a certain young Lord, who was by no means capable of performing the Functions of the Episcopal Dignity, he admonishes the said Chaplain, that his Office obliges him to continue to make Remonstrances to the King, to hinder him from disposing of the Bishoprick after such a manner.

In the Eleventh, he exhorts a Clergy-man, who had solemnly engag'd to embrace the Monastick Life, to perform his Vow.

The Twelfth is a consolatory Letter directed to one of his Nephews, afflicted with the Death of his Uncle, the burning of his House, and a Wound he receiv'd in his Foot.

In the Thirteenth, he reprehends a Young Monk, who endeavour'd to get a Priory, under pretence, that he should thereby have an opportunity of converting more Souls, and makes it appear, That a Monk ought not to covet Secular Employments, nor to aspire to Dignities, nor to affect to instruct others.

In the Fourteenth, directed to the Chaplains of the King of England, he communicates to them certain Reflections that a Fit of Sickness caus'd him to make on the miserable condition of those Clergy-men, who are oblig'd to reside in the Courts of Princes; of which he gives a very lively Description, and exhorts them to follow his Example in quitting that course of Life.

The Fifteenth is an Instruction to Rainaud newly chosen Bishop of Chartres, concerning the Episcopal Qualities and Functions. He says, That the first thing that is sometimes done, is to make enquiry into the Revenues belonging to the Bishoprick, and not into the present condition of it: He censures the Luxury and Magnificence of some Bishops of his time, the pains that they took to heap up Riches and to gratifie Princes, and the Secular Course of Life that they lead.

In the Sixteenth, he exhorts a certain Bishop immers'd in the management of many Affairs to make choice of a more quiet manner of Living, in order to promote his own Salvation.

In the Seventeenth, he shews, That a Clerk who drives a Trade, is no less culpable than one that follows Usury, and that all manner of inordinate endeavours to get and heap up Riches are unworthy of a Clergy-man.

In the Eighteenth, he gives us a lively description of the Irregularities of a certain Bishop, who was addicted to that Vice.

In the Nineteenth, he resolves two Questions, which were propos'd to him by one of his Friends who studied the Law at Paris, viz. 1. Whether a Woman, who turn'd Nun, upon a supposition that her Husband was dead, be oblig'd to leave the Convent, if he return? And 2. In case she be oblig'd to follow her Husband, whether she ought to assume the Veil again after his Death? He answers, That the Vow of Chastity made by her, being in the Husband's Power, is not obligatory; and that she ought to return with her Husband, and may marry again after his Decease. In that Letter, there is a remark very advantageous to the Schools of Paris, of which he saies, that as there was formerly a Proverbial saying, that those who had any Question to propose ought to repair to Avila; so in like manner at present it pass'd into a Proverb, that those who were desirous to have any Question decided need only go to Paris, where the greatest Difficulties are fairly resolv'd.

In the Twentieth he complains, That the Domestick Servants of Rainaud Bishop of Chartres remov'd him from the Palace of that Prelate, whom he blames for his too great Liberality.

In the Twenty first, he reprehends the haughtiness and arrogancy of a Canon, who was formerly one of his particular Friends.

In the Twenty second, directed to John of Salisbury, he commends his Constancy, and that of Thomas Arch-bishop of Canterbury, and advises them to persevere, and not to suffer themselves to be mov'd by any manner of Adversity or Persecutions.

In the Twenty third, written to Othavian the Pope's Legate, he declaims against the Abuse that was then predominant, to fill up the vacant Bishopricks with unworthy and uncappable Persons, who obtain'd them by the means of sinister practices or purchas'd them with Money.

In the Twenty fourth, he entreats the Friends of Thomas Arch-bishop of Canterbury to prevail upon that Prelate, to forgive the Arch-Deacon of Salisbury, who was desirous to be reconcil'd with him.

In the Twenty fifth, he exhorts an Official to quit that Employment, which he looks upon as very dangerous. "I am apt to believe (says he) that the Officials were so call'd, not from the name of their Office, but from the Verb Officio, which signifies to be hurtful, or to do Mischief: For the whole Function of an Official is to shear and flea at the pleasure of the Bishop the poor Sheep that are under his Jurisdiction: They are the Bishop's Horse-leeches, that cast up the Blood they have suck'd out, and which as it were so many Sponges, that being squeez'd restore the Water wherein they were soak'd, pour into their Masters Bosom the Treasure that they have extorted; insomuch that of all those execrable Purchases they have only left the stain of Sin: For that which is thus hoarded up by oppressing the Poor, serves to gratify the unruly Appetite of the Bishops, and draws Punishments on the Officials; who may be well compar'd to those private Doors, thro' which the Priests of Bel were wont secretly to convey the Sacrifices that were laid on the Altar of that False God; since the Bishops make use of their Hands to pillage the Estates of other Men, casting upon them all the marks of Infamy and the whole guilt of those Crimes, of which they make the sole advantage,-----The Office of the Officials at present, is to confound Right, to create Law-suits, to disannul Agreements, to prolong Trials, to suppress the Truth, to maintain Falshood, to seek for nothing but filthy Lucre, to sell Justice, " Justice, to commit all manner of unjust Actions, and to devise Cheats and Artifices to deceive the People. These are the Men, who over-load their Landlords with a numerous Retinue of Attendants and costly Equipages; who hunt after dainty Dishes; being very prodigal of the Estates of other Persons, and as covetous of their own: They are very critical in searching out the etymology and signification of Words, and make Glosses upon all manner of Syllables, on purpose to lay Snares for others, in order to drain their Purfes: They take upon them to interpret the Laws according to their own capricious Humour, admitting some, and rejecting others at their Pleasure; they corrupt that which is sound, over-rule just Allegations, foment Divisions, conceal Crimes, make void lawful Marriages, penetrate into the Secrets of Families, defame innocent Persons, absolve the Guilty, and in a Word, leave no Stone unturn'd to get Money. This is the Character that Peter of Blois gives us of the Officials of his time, very different (as 'tis to be hop'd) from that of those Gentle-men, who now discharge those Functions in our Churches.

In the Twenty sixth, he advises a Friend of his to enter upon a Course of Divinity at Paris, after having left the study of the Civil-Law, to which he apply'd himself at Bononia; because a Clergy-man ought not to be entirely immers'd therein. He censures, by the way, the sinister Practices of the Advocates of his Time, who made it their whole business to get Money and to enrich themselves.

In the Twenty seventh, he acquaints the Canons of Beauvoir with the Death of Thomas Becket Arch-bishop of Canterbury, and tells them that there was reason to be so far from bewailing his Death, that they ought to rejoice at his Happinefs. He likewise makes mention of the Diffensions that happen'd in his Church, about the Election of a Successor.

The Twenty eighth, is written in the Name of Rotrou Arch-bishop of Rouen, to William Arch-bishop of Sens and the Pope's Legate, whom he exhorts to use his utmost endeavours to divert those Calamities, which were ready to break forth in the Territories belonging to the Church of Roan by reason of the War that was carry'd on by the two Kings.

In the Twenty ninth directed to the Abbot and Monks of St. Alban, he complains that one of their Priors had refus'd to entertain him at his Table, and shews how much Hospitality is recommendable, more especially in Monks.

In the Thirtieth, he communicates to his Friend Rainaud chosen Bishop of Bath, the Dream that he had upon his promotion to the Episcopal Dignity.

The Thirty first is written to the Abbot of Fontaines, concerning a Distemper with which Peter of Blois was afflicted.

The Thirty second is a recommendatory Letter directed to the Prior of Canterbury.

The Thirty third is written in the Name of Rotrou Arch-bishop of Roan to Henry III. the Son of Henry II. King of England, who was preparing to make War with his Father, to entreat him to take into his Protection, Andely and the other Territories of the Church of Roan.

In the Thirty fourth, he excuses himself to the Bishop of Perigueux, who had offer'd him his House; for not accepting of his Proposal, because he was detain'd by the Promises of his old Patron.

The Thirty fifth and Thirty sixth, are Exhortations to a certain Nun.

The Thirty seventh, is a Letter of Excuse to the Prior of Fumieges for neglecting to send back a Book that he had borrow'd of him.

The Thirty eighth, is an Apology directed to Albert Cardinal of the Church of Rome, for the Conduct of the Arch-bishop of Canterbury, who was accused of being ignorant of the Laws, covetous and too much inclin'd to raise his Family.

The Thirty ninth, is a Letter written by way of a secret Trust to one of his Friends, in which he sends him word, That the Court of Rome, according to the usual Custom had charged him with many Debts, and that if he could once find means to discharge them, he would take care not to fall into that Abyss for the future.

In the Fortieth, he condemns the Deportment of a certain Bishop who spoke ill of his Prince.

In the Forty first, he entreats Henry II. King of England to give him notice of the Place where he was, to the end that he might wait on him, and acquaints him that his Majesties Envoys are return'd from Rome, clear'd of their Silver and loaded with Lead, without being honour'd with any considerable Presents, and that the Ambassadors of the King of Spain were come to meet him to constitute him Mediator of the Peace between them.

The Forty second, is written to Robert Provost of Aire in Flanders elected Bishop of Cambray, to whom he gives a smart Reprimand for contenting himself to enjoy the Revenues of his Bishoprick, without taking care to perform the Episcopal Functions, and for leading a Secular and Scandalous course of Life.

The Forty third, is a very apposite Consolation compos'd by him upon occasion of the Sickness of a certain Person, in which he sufficiently makes it appear that he had study'd the Art of Physick.

In the Forty fourth, he advises Arnulphus Bishop of Lisieux not to leave his Bishoprick, by reason of any opposition that might be made by his Prince, his Chapter or the People of his Diocese; but he would persuade him to resign it, in case he aspir'd to that Dignity by under-hand dealings.

In the Forty fifth, he vindicates Rainald Bishop of Bath, from the imputation of having persecuted or occasion'd the Death of St. Thomas of Canterbury, and observes, that if he made somewhat too severe a Reflection upon him, at the time when that Arch-bishop excommunicated the Bishop of Salisbury, it ought to be forgiven him, as well as what he might have done against him thro' Ignorance, and so much the rather, in regard that he had expiated that Fault by a very rigorous Penance.

In the Forty sixth, directed to Richard Bishop of Syracuse, after having excus'd himself for returning to Sicily, he enlarges on the Commendation of Thomas Becket Arch-bishop of Canterbury.

The Forty seventh is written in the Name of Richard Arch-bishop of Canterbury, who exhorts Henry the Son of Henry II. King of England to desist from making War with his Father, and threatens to excommunicate him, unless he submit to his Remonstrances.

In the Forty eighth, he congratulates William Cardinal Bishop of Pavia, upon account that at last an end was put to the Quarrel between Pope Alexander and the Emperor Frederick, by his mediation, and declaims against Ostavian and his Electors.

In the Forty ninth, he complains, That some of the Canons of Chartres, whom he took for his Friends, had brought an Information against him in a Trial depending between him and Robert of Salisbury, for a Prebend of Chartres, and that not being able to fully his Reputation, they had slanderously traduc'd the Memory of his Father.

In the Fiftieth, he entreats the Bishop of Bayeux to absolve a certain Person, who had committed Man-slaughter in his own defence, and who being afflicted with a very sensible Grief for that unfortunate Accident, had done Penance in due Form.

In the Fifty first, he admonishes Jocelin Bishop of Salisbury to pay his Debts, and not to bestow too great Favours upon his Nephews.

In the Fifty second, he acquaints the Arch-bishop of Canterbury, who had sent him to the King of England, That he met with a furious Storm, during his passage into Normandy, and assures him, that he was ready to undertake every thing, and to endure all manner of hardship in his Service.

The Fifty third, is a Circular Letter to all the Bishops of England, written in the Name of Richard Arch-bishop of Canterbury and Primate of the Kingdom, in which he enjoyns them, not to suffer Persons, whose Ordination is not valid, to exercise the Episcopal Functions in their Diocesses, and to denounce a Sentence of Excommunication against those who forge the Pope's Bulls or counterfeit the Seals of the Bishops.

In the Fifty fourth, he advises the Arch-deacon of Poitiers, not to compel Adelicia his Niece, to become a Nun; because the Monastick State, ought not to be embrac'd with less freedom than that of Marriage.

In the Fifty fifth, he congratulates Adelicia, upon the desire she express'd to take the Veil, and in regard that she had actually made a Vow to that purpose, and exhorts her to put so laudable a Design in execution with all convenient speed.

In the Fifty sixth, he endeavours to divert Walter Bishop of Rocheſter from the strong Inclination he had to Hunting.

In the Fifty seventh Letter, directed to one of his Friends a Monk of the Abbey of Aulnay in Normandy, who expected to be deliver'd from Temptations immediately after his admittance into a Religious Order; he treats of the continual Conflict between the Flesh and the Spirit, and sends him a Prose or Sermon on that Subject.

In the Fifty eighth, he complains to Renauld Bishop of Bath, by reason that the latter had suspended his Vice-Arch-deacon, without dispatching any Canonical Monitions before-hand, and to the prejudice of a Privilege that was granted him in the Council of Lateran, that he should not be excommunicated nor any Person that belong'd to him by any Bishop, and declares that he had so much the greater reason to take it ill, in regard that that which gave occasion to those rigorous Proceedings, was only a small sum of Money that was due to the Bishop, and that he had already given Orders for the payment of it.

In the Fifty ninth, he exhorts that Bishop to be reconciled with a certain Person nam'd Henry, and to turn one Simon out of his Company, who was a dangerous Flatterer and a Sy-cophant.

In the Sixtieth, he approves the Complaints made by one of his Friends, who was much offended that the Bishops should enrich their Nephews with the Church-Revenues, instead of maintaining the Poor. He observes that that was no new Disorder, and that Poverty ought to be prefer'd before Riches.

In the Sixty first, he dissuades an Arch-Deacon from the exercise of Hunting.

In the Sixty second, he writes in the Name of Geffrey Bishop of Lincoln to one Le Blond, whom he reproves for his Disobedience in leaving that Bishop to follow divers Employments, and forbids him to oppose the Interest of the Arch-bishop of Canterbury.

The Sixty third, is a Letter of Thanks to Peter Bishop of Arras.

The Sixty fourth, is written in the Name of Gautier Arch-bishop of Roan and of the Bishops of Normandy, to Pope Celestin III. to entreat his Holiness to use his utmost endeavour to procure the deliverance of Richard King of England, who was taken Prisoner at his return from the Holy Land by the Duke of Austria.

The Sixty fifth, is written against the Superstitions of those, who pretend to fore-tell future Events by Dreams, or by other means of the like nature.

In the Sixty sixth, he congratulates Gautier Arch-bishop of Palermo upon his promotion to that Dignity: He gives that Prelat a Character of Henry II. King of England, and clears him from the Murder of Thomas Becket Arch-bishop of Canterbury.

In the Sixty seventh, he proves by many Reasons to King Henry II. that he ought to cause his Son to apply himself to Study.

The Sixty eighth, is written in the Name of Richard Arch-bishop of Canterbury to Pope Alexander III. against the Abbot of Malmesbury, who endeavour'd to withdraw himself from the Jurisdiction of his Bishop. He declaims in that Letter, against the Privileges that are granted at Rome to the Abbots for Money, which gives them occasion to insult over their Primates and Diocefans, to lose the Respect they ought to have for them, and by degrees to shake off the Yoke of Obedience, which was formerly the only means to reclaim them, and to restrain their Ambition. "The Abbots (says he) cannot endure to have a Superior set over them, to reform the Abuses committed by them; They would willingly have an absolute power to do every thing with impunity, and neglect the Monastical Discipline to gratify their unruly Passions. Upon which account it is, that almost all the Revenues of the Monasteries are left at Rack and Manger, and are liable to be pillag'd by every Invader: For on the one side, the Abbots mind nothing else but following their Pleasures, and are intent only on making good Cheer; and on the other side, the Monks being as it were destitute of a Head, spend their Life in Idleness and continual Quarrels. The mischief (adds he) requires a speedy remedy; for if it be not timely apply'd, 'tis to be fear'd lest as the Abbots shake off the Yoke of the Bishops, so the latter should throw off that of the Arch-bishops, and the Deans and Arch-Deacons should likewise find means to exempt themselves from the Jurisdiction of their Diocefans. Alas! what form of Justice is this! or rather, what manner of deformity of the Law! to hinder Pupils from hearkening to their Tutors; Children from obeying their Parents; Soldiers from serving their Prince; and Servants from submitting to their Masters! What is it to free Abbots from the Jurisdiction of their Bishop, unless it be to authorize Disobedience and Rebellion, and to arm Children against their Father? 'Tis their Office, who sit as supreme Judges, to determine this Case, and to take care lest unjust Actions should take their rise from the Courts of Judicature, where application is made for the redressing of Grievances.

In the Sixty ninth Letter, directed to Radulphus Bishop of Angers, he laments the Failings of the Inhabitants of that City, who had abandon'd King Henry II. in the War that he maintain'd against his Son.

In the Seventieth, he advises John Bishop of Chartres, rather to bestow Benefices on his Nephews, who were upright and poor Men, than on Foreigners, who are not so worthy of them.

The Two following Letters contain nothing remarkable.

The Seventy third, written in the Name of Richard Arch-bishop of Canterbury to all the Bishops of England, is against a Custom that prevail'd in that Kingdom, only to punish with Excommunication, those who assassinated Bishops and other Clergy-men, whereas capital Punishments were inflicted on other Murderers.

The following Letters to the Eighty second comprehend nothing very remarkable relating to Church-Discipline.

In the Eighty second, directed under the Name of Richard Arch-bishop of Canterbury to the Cistercian Monks, after having commended that Order, he takes notice of one Fault committed by them, which is their refusing to pay Tithes to Clerks and Monks: He gives them to understand, that it is an Act of Injustice; that altho' they might enjoy that Immunity, whilst they were Poor, yet they had no right to it at present, since they were become Rich; and that what Privileges soever they might obtain from Rome, they could not in Conscience make use of them to usurp the Estates of others: Lastly, he threatens to excommunicate them if they continue to retain those Tithes.

In the Eighty third, written in the Name of Walter Arch-Deacon of Oxford to Bartholomew Bishop of Exeter, he advises him to declare the Marriage null, that was contracted between Robert and Ismenia his Kins-woman; according to the express Order he had receiv'd from the Pope.

The Eighty fourth is directed to Pope Alexander III. under the Name of Richard Arch-bishop of Canterbury to vindicate the Conduct of the Bishops, who reside in the King's Court, in order to maintain the Interest and Rights of the Church. "For (says he) if there were no Bishops in the Council, nor in favour with the Prince; the Wicked would soon find means to harraßs the Church, and the Presumption of Laicks would oppress the Clergy after

"after an intolerable manner: But at present, if any thing be attempted to the prejudice of the Church, the Bishops are ready to oppose it; and if the King should be exasperated against innocent Persons, his Anger is appeas'd by their Entreaties. By this means, the rigour of Justice is moderated; the Cries of the Poor reach the Prince's Ear; the Dignity of the Church is maintain'd; the Indigence of distressed People is reliev'd; the Devotion of Lay-men is encreas'd; Religion is protected; the Sentences in Courts of Judicature are directed; the Laws are submi'ted to; the Decrees of Rome are receiv'd; and the Revenues of the Churches are augmented: He adds, That the Arch-bishops and Bishops of Sicily were wont in like manner to reside in the Court of their Prince, and that there was a Design on foot in England to abrogate that Custom, but that divers prudent and judicious Persons had determin'd that it was absolutely necessary for them to continue there, and that if they were hinder'd from having access to the Prince; at the same time the Monasteries would be depriv'd of their Tranquility, the Afflicted of Consolation, and the Church of its Liberty. Therefore our Author concludes, That although the Bishops were very desirous to leave the Court, by reason of the Inconveniencies they sufer in that Station, nevertheless they are detain'd, as it were by force, upon account of the Publick Advantage.

The Eighty fifth Letter, contains a sharp Reprimand made to Robert Bishop of Salisbury, for taking too great delight in Feasting, and for laying out so vast Expences in furnishing his Table, that he let the Buildings of his Church fall to ruin.

In the Eighty sixth, he diverts a Carthusian Monk nam'd Alexander, from the Design he had to quit his Order, under pretence that Mass was not said every day in the Monastery; and shews, That St. Benedict never was a Priest, and that he spent a great deal of time without hearing Mass, even not knowing one Easter-day, that it was that great Festival: That St. Paul and St. Antony, the first Hermits, pass'd many days without hearing Mass, and that we do not read that some great Saints offer'd up the Holy Sacrifice daily: That such a frequent Administration of the Sacraments might render them contemptible, and that the selfishness of it, encreases the Respect due to them: That indeed we sin incessantly, and that a continual Remedy is requisite for the expiation of our Guilt; but that nevertheless this Host, of an infinite Value, ought not to be offer'd up, but with a Spirit of Humility and a contrite Heart. To that purpose, he quotes many Passages of the Fathers, and at last affirms, That the secret Motive which induc'd that Monk to think of quitting his Order, was to lead a less austere, and a more free Course of Life.

In the Eighty seventh Letter, he comforts William Bishop of Ely, who was discharg'd from the management of the Affairs of State in England, by the treachery of certain Noblemen, who had mis-represented him to King Richard; which gave an occasion to Peter of Blois to declaim against those Counsellors who give bad Advice to Princes. The Eighty ninth is written on the same Subject to a Bishop, who had contributed to the said William's disgrace at Court.

In the Eighty eighth, he entreats an Abbot to receive a certain Monk, who was desirous to return to his Monastery.

In the Ninetieth, he gives an account to his Brother William Abbot of Mani, of the reasons of his departure from Sicily, and takes notice at the same time of the News that was spread abroad, That that Abbot had obtain'd a Licence of the Pope, to wear the Mitre, Ring and Sandals. He maintains, That the use of those Ornaments in any other Person but a Bishop, is an arrogant Vanity, and a presumptuous Ostentation; That they ought only to be us'd on some extraordinary Occasions; such as the Dedication of Churches, the Consecration of Virgins, and the Ordination of Clerks, and that therefore they can be of no use to an Abbot, who has no right to perform those Functions; That they are actually more chargeable to him than profitable, and that they do him a greater dishonour than credit; That that Abuse has no Grounds neither in the Gospel, nor in St. Benedict's Rule; That it foments the Refractoriness of the Abbots and the Contentments they have with the Bishops, and that no Man ought to flatter himself, that the Privilege of Rome can be a sufficient excuse for such Acts of Disobedience before God. Therefore he conjures him by the Salvation of their common Father, and by the Breasts of their Mother, to lay aside those Pontifical Ornaments, or if it cannot be done without Scandal, to choose rather to quit his Dignity. William being mov'd with this Remonstrance, resign'd his Abbey into the Pope's Hands, as it appears by the 93d Letter, in which Peter of Blois congratulates him; That he prefer'd the Humility of a simple Monk to the Dignity of an Abbot, and a place of abode in France to one in Sicily.

In the Ninety first, he taxes Radulphus Bishop of Lisieux with Coverousness, and the practice of Usury, more especially in regard that he did not open his Granaries in a time of scarcity and dearth of Provisions.

The following Letters contain nothing very remarkable.

In the Ninety seventh, directed to the Abbot of Evesham, he shews that the diversity of Monastick Orders is advantageous to the Church, but that none ought to pass lightly from one Order to another. He observes in the end, that singing of Psalms for a considerable time, is very useful, if it could be continu'd with Devotion, and that although it be accompany'd with wearisomness, yet it does not cease to be a good Employment. As for Handy-work, he neither blames, nor commends it in a Monk, Labores autem manuales in Monacho nec arguere, nec laudare presumo.

The Ninety eighth and the Ninety ninth, are written in the Name of Richard Arch-bishop of Canterbury; viz. the former to his Suftragans about the necessity of relieving the Holy Land, and the second to Pope Urban III. to congratulate his promotion to the Pontifical Dignity, and to thank his Holiness for the Pall, which he had sent to him.

In the Hundredth Letter, he vindicates an Arch-bishop who was accus'd of being too meek and moderate.

The Hundred and first, directed to Robert Arch-deacon of Nantes, is a Judgement that he passes on the Disposition of two of his Nephews, whom he had put under his Tuition.

The Hundred and second, contains a long Complaint made by the Abbot of Redding who was desirous to renounce his Dignity, with Peter of Blois's Answer, in which he advises him not to do it.

The following Letters contain nothing of any great moment as to Ecclesiastical Discipline.

In the Hundred and twelfth, sent to the Bishop of Orleans, he maintains the Immunities of the Church, and asserts that the King of France ought to exact no other Supplies of the Clergy, than their Prayers to carry on the War, that he was preparing to manage against the Saracens in the Holy Land.

In the Hundred and thirteenth, he exhorts Geffrey Arch-bishop of York, to oppose the new Hereticks who appear'd in his Diocess, and to publish so strict an Ordinance against them, that the others might be terrify'd with the Severity of their Punishment.

In the Hundred and fourteenth, he congratulates John of Salisbury upon his Instalment in the Bishoprick of Chartres, and commends the Relation that he wrote of the Life of Thomas Becket Arch-bishop of Canterbury.

In the Hundred and fifteenth, after having shewn in what degrees of Consanguinity Robert and Adolecia were related one to another, he produces the several Impediments of their Marriage, and comprehends them in six Verses.

The Hundred and sixteenth, is written to Hugh Abbot of St. Denis, to whom he sends one of his Books to be examin'd, and comforts him for the Indignity that was put upon him by the King of France.

In the Hundred and seventeenth, he reprehends Geffrey Abbot of Marmoutier, by reason that he had caus'd an Action to be commenc'd against the Prior of St. Come, for certain Lands which he claim'd, as belonging to his Jurisdiction.

There is nothing remarkable in the following Letters to the 123d, in which he refuses to accept of the Sacerdotal Dignity, not through contempt, but an extraordinary respect for that Function.

In the Hundred twenty fourth, he comforts Gautier Arch-bishop of Roan, banish'd from his Church, and justifies his retreat.

In the Hundred twenty fifth, he admonishes the same Prelate, to avoid slothfulness during his Exile, and to apply himself to the reading of the Holy Scriptures.

In the Hundred twenty sixth, directed to the Abbot of Glocester, he gives an Encomium of Odo Chanter of Bourges chosen Bishop of Paris; to whom he writes the Hundred twenty seventh, to renew their old Friendship and the Correspondence that formerly pass'd between them.

In the Hundred twenty eighth, Peter of Blois complains to William Arch-bishop of Sens, that he had not as yet perform'd the Promise that he made to entertain him in his House, and to conferr a Benefice upon him.

In the Hundred twenty ninth, he writes against the Arch-deacon of Orleans, who had introduc'd Simoniacal Practices into his Church.

In the Hundred and thirtieth, directed to John Bishop of Chartres, he clears himself from the Charge brought against him, that he made use of the Recommendation of the King of England, of divers Lords, and of the Pope, to procure a Prebend in the Church of Chartres.

In the Hundred thirty first, he reproves one of his Nephews, the Prior of a Monastery, by reason that neglecting the study of the Liberal Sciences and abandoning his Solitude, he frequented publick Places, and endeavour'd to curry favour with Noble-men.

The Hundred thirty second and the Hundred thirty fourth, directed to Persons newly made Abbots, contain very useful Instructions for the conduct of Superiours.

In the Hundred thirty third, written to the Dean and Chapter of Salisbury, he maintains that he is not oblig'd to reside in his Prebend in that City, in regard of the smalness of the Revenue, which was not sufficient for defraying the Charge of a Journey thither.

The Hundred thirty fifth, is a Dispensation for Non-residence granted by the Arch-bishop of Canterbury to a Canon of Salisbury.

The Hundred thirty sixth, is a Letter from Henry II. King of England to Alexander III. in which he complains of the Rebellion of his Children, and implores the assistance of that Pope.

In the Hundred thirty seventh, he congratulates a Novice Monk, and gives him wholesome Advice.

In the Hundred thirty eighth, he expresses to Gautier Arch-bishop of Roan, the Joy that he had upon his return from his Exile.

In the Hundred thirty ninth, he entreats the Abbot and Monks of Cisteaux to put up their Prayers to God, that he would vouchsafe to grant him his Grace, to enable him worthily to perform the Functions of the Priesthood, to which Dignity he was lately raised, and explains the reasons why he deferr'd the receiving of that Order till that time.

In the Hundred and fortieth, he exhorts Petrus Diaconus to quit the study of the Law, and to apply himself altogether to that of the Holy Scriptures and of Divinity. In this Letter, he makes use of the Term of Transubstantiation in treating of the Eucharist. " Thus you see (says he) in one single Sacrament a deep Abyss impenetrable to Humane Reason; I mean, in the Bread and Wine transubstantiated by Virtue of the Heavenly Words, into the Body and Blood of JESUS CHRIST, the Accidents that were therein, remaining without a Subject; and although the Body of JESUS CHRIST be Flesh and not Spirit, nevertheless it Nourishes the Soul rather than the Body. The same Body is to be found in several Places and on divers Altars, against the nature of Bodies, without ceasing to be in Heaven: For although by its Nature it can only be in one Place after a circumscriptible Manner, yet it is in many Places by its omnipotent Virtue and Energy, and after a spiritual Manner.

In the Hundred forty first, he complains to Gautier Arch-bishop of Roan, that a certain private Person had detain'd the Revenues of a Prebend that belong'd to him, and entreats that Prelate to cause Restitution to be made.

In the Hundred forty second, he comforts the Prior and Monks of Evesham, who were in great Trouble, and exhorts them to bear it with Patience.

The four following Letters relate to the Confinement of Richard I. King of England, and were written to procure his Liberty.

In the Hundred forty seventh, he reproves Robert Bishop of Bangor, who determin'd to retain a certain Benefice, which he had conferr'd on another Clerk.

In the Hundred forty eighth, he exhorts Savaric Bishop of Bath to return to his Diocese, and not to leave his Church with a design to travel.

In the Hundred forty ninth, he complains, that they were about to deprive him of his Arch-deaconry in the end of his Life.

In the Hundred and fiftieth, he mollifies what he had said in the fourteenth Letter, against those Clergy-men, who reside in the Courts of Princes.

In the Hundred fifty first, he entreats Pope Innocent III. to augment the Revenues of the Arch-deaconry of London, which was lately conferr'd upon him. He gives his Holiness to understand, that there were about Forty thousand Men within the Jurisdiction of his Arch-deaconry, and above One hundred and twenty Churches; nevertheless that he was not able to collect any of the Duties that are customably paid to the Arch-deacons.

In the Hundred fifty second, he entreats that Pope, to change a Chapter of which he was Dean, into a Monastery of the Cistercian Order.

The Hundred fifty third, is written in the Name of Rotrou Arch-bishop of Roan, and of Arnulphus Bishop of Lisieux, to Henry II. King of England; in which they give him an account of the Negotiations in the Court of the King of France, where they were sent by that Prince.

The Hundred fifty fourth, is likewise written in the Name of the same Arch-bishop, who entreats Eleonora, Queen of England, and her Sons, to be reconcil'd with King Henry II.

In the Hundred fifty fifth Letter, that Arch-bishop excuses himself to the Prior and Monks of La Charite, for not retiring to their Convent, by reason that he could not leave his Flock during the War.

The following Letters to the Hundred eighty third and last, contain nothing very remarkable as to Ecclesiastical Affairs, and many of them are Consolatory.

There is no Author, who has fill'd his Letters with a greater number of Quotations, out of the Holy Scriptures and Ecclesiastical and Profane Writings, than Peter of Blois; insomuch, that they are scarce any thing else but a Contexture of such Passages. That which is properly his own Matter, is full of Antitheses and Puns: However, he discouries with much freedom, sharply reproves Vices, and maintains Church Discipline and the Ecclesiastical Constitutions.

His Sermons are written almost after the same manner as his Letters, in a concise and sententious Style, to the number of Sixty five; neither does he explain therein the Points of Morality in their utmost extent, but he fills them with divers Maxims and Notions, which are accompanied with no other Ornaments, but Antitheses and nice Comparisons of Words:

But he handles Matters more at large in his Tracts, which are Seventeen in Number.

The First is a Moral Discourse on the Transfiguration of JESUS CHRIST.

The Second, is another Discourse of the same Nature on St. Paul's Conversion.

The Third, is a compendious Chronicle on the beginning and the end of the Book of Job.

The Fourth, is a very pathetic Exhortation to induce the Christian Princes to send succours to the Holy Land.

The Fifth, is an Instruction written in the Name of Pope Alexander III. to the Sultan of Iconium.

The Sixth, is a Treatise of Sacramental Confession and Penance.

The Seventh, is a Tract concerning the Functions and Qualities of a Confessor, and the manner how he ought to demean himself in the Administration of the Sacrament of Penance.

The Eighth piece, call'd the Episcopal Canon, contains Instructions for Bishops.

The Ninth, is an Invective against one who paid a Centure on his Works, and charg'd him with being a Flatterer of Princes, and a false Accuser of Clergy-men and Monks: He clears himself from both Imputations, by producing a Catalogue of his Writings; in which he asserts, there is nothing to be found that can convict him of what was laid to his charge, and several particulars to the contrary. He enlarges in Commendation of the Monastick Life, and explains some Passages of his Works, that were objected against him; and amongst others, what he had laid down concerning Free Will, which he was accus'd of having confounded with Grace: He maintains, That the former is supported by, and depends on the latter, after such a manner, that the Mercy of God is not prejudicial to Merit, nor Grace to Free Will.

The Tenth, is a Treatise against the Jews, in which he has accurately collected all the Prophecies that relate to JESUS CHRIST.

The Eleventh, is a large Treatise of Christian Friendship, of the Love of God, and Charity to our Neighbour; in which he insists on the Causes, Duties, Parts and Effects of those Verrues.

The Twelfth, is of the Usefulness of Afflictions, of which he shews the several Advantages.

The Thirteenth, call'd, What are they, quales sunt? is a Satyr against unworthy Pastors. He justifies at first, what he is about to write against them, and declares that 'tis not his design to attack the Worthy Pastors, but only the Unworthy, who have no Faith; who have not enter'd the Sheep-fold through the Gate; who do not deserve the Names of Pastor, Pope, Bishop or Prelate; because they have not any of the Qualities signified by those Terms; who enrich their Relations with the Church-Revenues; who confer Canonries and other Spiritual Livings upon them; or who being of mean Extraction, and of an unknown Family, are endu'd with no generous Principles, but with a great deal of fordid Baseness without Humility, whose Dignity soon corrupts their Manners. He shews, that these sorts of Bishops ought not to be flatter'd, but that their Faults ought to be expos'd, to the end that those Persons who present themselves to be admitted into Holy Orders, may be duly examin'd, and that a considerable time may be taken, to be well assur'd of their demeanour, and of their Course of Life.

The Fourteenth, is a Fragment of a Letter, that he wrote about Silence.

The Fifteenth, is a Fragment of his Book of the Changes of Fortune.

The Sixteenth, is a Tract concerning the Sacred Books and Writers of the Old and New Testament.

The Seventeenth, is a Poetical Piece on the Eucharist.

The first Edition of Peter of Blois's Works, was printed at Mentz; the second at Paris, A. D. 1519; the third at Mentz in 1600. by Buseus, who annex'd an Addition of some Tracts in 1605. This Edition was copied out in the Bibliotheca Patrum, printed at Colen; but in all these Editions, the Sermons of Peter Comestor, were inserted instead of those of Peter of Blois: At last M. de Goussainville, publish'd a new Edition of all Peter of Blois's Works, in which are to be found the Genuine Sermons of that Author, printed at Paris in 1667. This was follow'd in the last Bibliotheca Patrum, set forth at Lyons.

STEPHEN Bishop of Tournay.

Stephen
Tournay.

STEPHEN, Abbot of St. Genevieve, and afterwards Bishop of Tournay, was born at Orleans, A. D. 1135. and completed his Studies in the Schools of the Cathedral Churches of that City and of Chartres: He apply'd himself more especially to that of the Canon-Law, and became a Regular Canon in 1165. in the Monastery of St. Evre, where St. Victor's Rule was establish'd in 1158. by Roger, who was the first Abbot since the Reformation.

Stephen

Stephen succeeded him in that Office, but the Abbey of Genevieve being vacant in 1177. by the Death of the Abbot Aubert, he was chosen in his Place. He was promoted to the Bishoprick of Tournay in 1192. and govern'd it to the Year, 1203. which was that of his Death.

This Author wrote a Commentary on Gratian's Decretal, with divers Sermons and Letters. All his Works are extant in Manuscript; but Father du Moulinet did not judge, that the Commentary on the Decretal, and the Sermons were worthy to be brought to light, and therefore he only publish'd the Preface to that Commentary, the first Sermon and the Texts of Scripture, on which the Thirty others were compos'd, with his Letters, which he divided into three Parts; the First of which contain the Letters which he wrote being as yet Abbot of St. Everte, from A. D. 1163. to 1177.

The First, is a very pathetic Complaint, which he recited in the Synod of the Bishops of the Province held at Sens, concerning the Murder committed on the Person of John Dean of Orleans, by a certain Lord, out of whose Hands, he endeavour'd to wrest some Revenues belonging to the Chapter of Orleans, which he had usurp'd.

He was enjoyn'd by the same Assembly, to write to the King, to demand Justice for that execrable Fact. He did it after such a manner, as was capable of exciting him to take vengeance for so heinous a Crime. However, the King did not approve that Letter, and conceiv'd much Displeasure against Stephen upon that account; which gave occasion to his Enemies to persecute him, and to threaten to pillage his Estate, and to cause him to be put to Death, unless he desisted from the prosecution of that Suit. Whereupon he had recourse to William Bishop of Chartres, the Son of Thibaud or Theobald Count of Champagne, who appeas'd the King's Anger, and restor'd Stephen to his Favour, as the latter had entreated him to do in his second Letter.

The Third is a Letter written by Ponce Bishop of Clermont, in which he desires Maurice Bishop of Paris, and Stephen Abbot of St. Everte to give a resolution of a Case of Conscience touching the validity of the Baptism of Infants that are dipt in the Water, these Words being recited, viz. In the Name of the Father, of the Son, and of the Holy Ghost, without expressing the Action by these Terms, I baptize thee. A certain Father had Baptiz'd his Child after that Manner, and it was customary to do so, in case of Necessity.

Maurice returns an Answer in the fourth Letter that that Baptism is null, and determines the matter with a great deal of assurance, in a few Words. Stephen replies on the contrary, in the fifth Letter, that that Baptism is valid, provided the three Persons of the Trinity be invoc'd, and that 'tis not absolutely necessary to add these Words, I Baptize thee; because it is not said in the Gospel, Go and Baptize the Nations saying, I Baptize you in the Name of the Father, &c. but only, Baptize them in the Name of the Father, &c. He confirms his Opinion by divers Passages of the Fathers, which only require the Invocation of the Holy Trinity, for the validity of Baptism. He affirms, that these Terms I Baptize thee, are added by the Church, that they only have regard to the solemnity of the Action, and do not belong to the substance of the Sacrament: de solemnitate Ministerii, non de substantia Sacramenti. He adds, that if a different Opinion were admitted, an infinite number of Children must unavoidably be Damned, who were Baptiz'd by Laicks in case of Necessity; by reason that the greatest part of those ignorant People, were wont to Baptize only saying, En nome Patres & Fils, & Esprits Santos. However he declares, that those Priests ought to be censur'd and put to Penance, who thro' negligence or ignorance omit any thing that relates to the solemnity of the administration of Baptism. But he maintains, that a Child which was once Baptiz'd in the Name of the Trinity, ought not to be Baptiz'd again, altho' the Father did not express the Action by these Words, I Baptize thee. Lastly, he says that he who Baptizes a Child, contracts a spiritual Affinity with the Mother, which renders him incapable of Marrying her; or of co-habiting with her as his Wife, if they were Marry'd before.

The other Letters contain'd in this first Part, are either recommendatory in favour of divers Persons, or relate to particular Affairs; as the rebuilding of the Church of St. Everte which was burnt by the Normans, to which purpose, he desires supplies of the Chapter of St. Martin at Tours, and of his Friends: The restauration of a Prior who had wasted the Revenues of his Monastery: The Contest between the Church of St. Samson, and the Chapter of St. Croix, &c.

In the second Part, are comprehended the Letters written by Stephen of Tournay whilst he govern'd the Abbey of St. Genevieve, from A. D. 1177. to 1192. The greatest part of these Letters are complimental or recommendatory, and contain nothing very remarkable. There are several written in favour of the Arch-bishop of Tours, about the Contest that he had with the Bishop of Dol, as the Fortieth, the Hundred and seventh, the Hundred and eighth, the Hundred and tenth and the Hundred and fortieth: Others against the Regular Canons of St. John des Vignes, who were desirous to enjoy their private Estates, and who being provided of good Livings, endeavour'd to withdraw themselves from their Obedience to the Abbot, to depend only on the Jurisdiction of the Bishop. He maintains, That they ought always to be subject to the Abbot, and to submit to his Will, according to the Custom, which which (as he says) was always put in practice ; otherwise all manner of Regular Discipline would be entirely abolish'd, and there would be as many Abbots as Curates : See the Sixty first, the Ninety fifth and the Hundred sixty second Letters.

In the Seventy first, he proves, That those who have made a Vow to pass from the Order of Grandmont to that of Cîteaux, ought to perform that Vow, and in general, that Translations from a remiss Order to a more austere are lawful and expedient. In the Hundred forty third, he relates a Sentence pass'd by the King, in favour of certain Clerks of the Order of Grandmont against the Prior and some Lay-brothers of the same Order, and writes to the Pope in his own Name, in that of the Abbots of St. Germain des Prez and of St. Victor ; and even in that of his Clergy ; to confirm that Sentence. In the Hundred forty first, he advises the Dean of the Church of Rheims to hinder the Canons of that Cathedral from abrogating what was left of their ancient Rule, viz. to eat always in common in the same Refectory, and to live together in the same Cloister.

The Hundred forty sixth the Hundred forty seventh, the Hundred forty eighth, the Hundred forty ninth and the Hundred fifty third are written to the King of Denmark, and to some Bishops of that Kingdom and of Sweden to induce them to procure Lead in England to cover the Church of St. Genevieve, which was burnt and pillaged by the Normans. He makes by the way, a very ingenious Antithesis, between the Lead that is purchased at Rome for Bulls, and that which is bought in England ; saying, That one serves to impoverish the Churches, and the other to cover them : Anglico Plumbo t. guntur Ecclesie, nudantur Romano. He entreats the Pope to grant two Dispensations viz. one in the eighty second Letter for the Chancellor of France, who was denied admittance into Holy Orders, because he was not born in lawful Wedlock, and the other in the Hundred and thirteenth upon the same occasion, in favour of a certain Person who had exercis'd the Office of an Attorney General : He observes in the former that the Canon of not admitting base born Persons among the Clergy, was not generally receiv'd in all the Churches : He likewise makes a request to the Pope, to confirm the Immunity of the Abbey of St. Evreux at Orleans in the Fifty eighth and Fifty ninth Letters, and in the Hundred fifty fifth, to maintain the Revenues belonging to the Prebends of the Cathedral of Paris, appropriated to the Church of St. Victor.

The Hundred fifty ninth, is concerning the difficulty of leading a solitary course of Life, and of the means of attaining to it. Eovard of Avonnes Bishop of Tournay dying, A. D. 1191. the Clergy at first chose Peter Chanter of the Church of Paris, to supply his Place, and Stephen wrote the Hundred seventy fifth and last Letter of the second Part, in his behalf, but that Election being adjudged to be null, he himself was install'd in the Bishoprick of Tournay, and caus'd his Nephew to be chosen Abbot of St. Genevieve in his stead.

The first Letters of the third Part, relate to his promotion to that Dignity. In the Two hundred and second, he determines, That the Marriage of a Novice who has left his Convent for that purpose is valid. In the Two hundred and eighth, he gives a particular account of his Life and Conversation, to justify himself against Berrier Arch-Deacon of Cambray, who accus'd him of not leading a Life conformable to that of a Bishop. " I very seldom go (says he) out of the City : I assist as often as is possible, at the celebration of all the Divine Offices ; I Preach the Word of God to my Diocefans, after the best manner that I can ; I declaim against the modern Heresies : I freely administer the Sacraments, which I have freely receiv'd. I detest Simoniackal Practices : I do not receive Bribes or unlawful Presents : I give wholsom Advice to all those, who make Confession to me ; and impose on them profitable Penances : I comfort the Afflicted as far as it lies in my Power : I spend my spare Hours in reading and meditating on the Holy Scripture : I exercise Hospitality in entertaining my Guests cheerfully, and keeping a good Table, never eating my Bread alone ; yet I do not riotously waste the Patrimony of JESUS CHRIST in maintaining Stage-players and Farce-actors. Such is my outward demeanour, and as for the inward disposition of my Mind, it is known to none but God.

The Two hundred twenty fourth, Two hundred twenty fifth and the Two hundred twenty sixth Letters have reference to the Abbot of St. Martin at Tournay, whom he suspended for leading a disorderly Life, and re-establish'd him at the request of the Bishop of Arras, on condition that he should observe the Rules, that were prescribed to him, and which are specify'd in the Two hundred twenty fourth Letter. The Two hundred thirty first and the following are written against the Sentence of Suspension, which Mellior the Pope's Legate was about to denounce against the Country of Flanders : In the Two hundred forty third, and the next, he puts up Complaints against the Inhabitants of Tournay, who refus'd to submit to his Authority. In the Two hundred forty eighth and Two Hundred forty ninth, he complains, that the Arch-bishop of Arras conferr'd Orders on the Monks of St. Amand without his leave. The Two hundred fifty first is a Declaration directed to the Pope, on this Subject, viz. That the Study of the Fathers was then generally neglected to follow that of Scholastick Divinity, and of the Decretals. The Students (says he) having a relish for nothing but Novelties, and the Tutors endeavouring to enhance their own Reputation, rather than to promote the Instruction of others, compile every Day new Sums or Systems of Divinity, and new Theological Works, on purpose to amuse and deceive their Audi“tors; as if the Writings of the Fathers were not sufficient, who have explain'd the Holy “Scriptures, by the same Spirit with which the Prophets and Apostles were inspir'd when they “wrote them. But these modern Doctors bring in new, unknown and strange sorts of Mei-“ses, when the King's Wedding Feasts are quite made ready, when the Oxen and Fowl

 “are kill'd, and when it only remains that the Guests should sit down at Table to eat: Pub“lick Disputations are set on foot against the Decisions of the Church, touching the incom“prehensible Godhead: Flesh and Blood take upon them irreverently to dispute about the In“carnation of the Word: The Holy Indivisible Trin-ty, is as it were divided and torn in “pieces (with reverence be it spoken) in the Publick Places; insomuch, that there are almost “as many Errors as Doctors, as many Scandals as Auditories, and as many Blasphemies as “Places. If there be occasion to pass from Theological Disputes to the Trial of Causes “that are usually decided by the Canon Law, as soon as the Judges delegate are appointed, “or when the Ordinaries have taken cognizance of the Matter; a prodigious Labyrinth of “Decretal Letters is immediately produc'd, under the Name of Alexander of happy Memory, “from whence 'tis impossible for any Man to extricate himself; neither is any regard had to “the ancient Canons, but on the contrary, they are rejected and contemned. During which “confusion, it so falls out, that the wholesome Ordinances of the ancient Councils are not “follow'd in the Modern, and matters are not debated according to their natural Order, “with respect to the true merit of the Cause, by reason that the Decretal Letters have the “Pre-eminence, which perhaps are forged under the Name of divers Popes of Rome by Mo“dern Canonists. These are collected into an entire Volume, which is read in the Schools, “and publickly sold to the great profit of the Writers, who by that means take less pains, “and get more Money, by copying out those suspected Works. The third Objection that “may be made against the present manner of Studying, is, that the Liberal Arts and Sciences
 “have lost their ancient Liberty, and are brought under so great Subjection, that the Pro“fessors Chairs are fill'd with young Persons, and the quality of Tutors is attributed to “such as do not deserve to be look'd upon as Pupils, who without adhering to the Rules of “Art, employ themselves in setting Words in order and devising Sophisms, with which they “surprize ignorant and unthinking People; after the same manner as silly Flies are soon “catch'd in a Cobweb. Philosophy may well cry out, that her Garments are snatch'd away
 “and that her Body is torn in Pieces; so that there is no Elder left to comfort her; neither “is she any longer capable of administering comfort to any Elder. These Abuses most Holy “Father, require your powerful Hand to reform them, and that you should establish by your “sovereign Authority an Uniformity of Teaching, Learning and Disputing, lest the most “noble Science of Divinity should become contemptible; lest it should be said that JESUS “CHRIST is here, or there; or lest Holy Things should be thrown to Dogs, and Pearls “cast before Swine.

In the Two hundred fifty fifth Letter, he inveighs against another Abuse, that is to say, Appeals made to the Holy See by Inferiors to avoid the correction of their Superiors, and requires that Prelates and Abbots should be invested with an absolute Power to correct their Inferiors, and to change the Officers that depend on their Jurisdiction, without any manner of obstruction made by the means of Appeals to the Court of Rome. In the Two hundred sixty second Letter, he enlarges on the Commendation of Queen Ingelburga, the Wife of Philip King of France, and advises her in the following, not to suffer her Marriage to be dissolv'd.
 The other Letters do not contain any thing very remarkable. The whole number of them amounts to Two hundred eighty and seven in the last Edition set forth by Father du Moulinet, and Printed at Paris, A. D. 1689. altho' there were only Two hundred and forty in that of Maffon in 1611. The Style of these Letters is concise and close, but the Terms are not always pure, nor well Chosen; nevertheless they afford much satisfaction to the Reader, by reason that the Conceptions are regular and natural.

The Authors who wrote against the Albigeois and Vaudois.

GRETSEK brought to light, A. D. 1614. three Authors who wrote against the Albigeois and Vaudois in the end of the Twelfth Century: These three Writers are Ebrard of Bethune in the Province of Artois, Bernard Abbot of Fontcaud and Ermengard or Ermengaud.

EBRARD OF BETHUNE, confutes in his Work, 1. The Error of the Manichees, concerning the Law of Moses, and the Prophets; by shewing, That the Law ought not to be rejected; that the Patriarchs and the Prophets were Saved; and that it is the true God, who gave the Law, and created the World. Afterwards he passes to other Errors common to all the Hereticks of that time, about the Sacraments, and the Customs of the Church; and establishes against them the following Doctrines, viz. That Children ought to be bap-tiz'd; that it is lawful to marry; that the Sacrifice of the Eucharist, contains the Body of JESUS CHRIST; that none but Priests have the Power or Right of offering, and that they ought to do it in the Churches: That the Unction of the Sick is profitable; that Pilgrimages

A New Ecclesiastical History

grimaces upon account of Devotion, are commendable; that it is lawful to take a true Oath; that Malefactors may be punished and even put to Death; that we shall rise again in the the future State with the same Body that we now have; that Faith ought to be preferr'd to good Works; that Crosses ought to be honour'd; that Women shall be Saved, and rise again with the distinction of their Sex; that Salvation may be obtain'd by different means, and in different States; and that it is lawful to eat Flesh: Lastly, he shews that those Hereticks are culpable, in regard that they conceal themselves, and that altho' they boast of renouncing the Possessions of this World, yet they endeavour to enrich themselves by other means; that they mistake the meaning of Holy Scripture; and that all the Characters of Hereticks agree with them. He adds, That some of them call themselves Valois, and others Xabatates; that they are wont to tear off their Shoes, and that they continually expose themselves during the whole Day to the heat of the Sun, till Supper-time, when they appear in the publick Places. He concludes this Treatise with a Catalogue of all the Hereticks taken out of Isidorus, and with the Resolution of divers Questions propos'd by him.

Bernard
Fontcaud.

The second Author, who is BERNARD Abbot of Fontcaud, dedicated his Book to Pope Lucius III. and confutes the Vaudois, whom Bernard Arch-bishop of Narbonne had twice condemned after having heard their several Pleas. He makes particular mention of the Obedience due to Popes and Prelates; He declaims against the permission that those People allow Lay-men and even Women to Preach; against their Assertion that the Alms, Fastings, Sacrifices and Prayers of the Living do not avail any thing with respect to the Dead; against those who deny Purgatory, and maintain that Humane Souls are neither in Heaven nor Hell till the Day of Judgment; and against their Asseverations, that the People ought not to meet in the Churches to pray. Thus this Author positively opposes none but the Vaudois.

The Third nam'd ERMENGARD, at first impugns the Errors of the Manichees about the old Law, Marriage, the Incarnation, Passion, Death and Resurrection of JESUS CHRIST, and afterwards passes to other Errors concerning the Sacraments and Church-Discipline. He proves, that it is requisite to have Churches and Altars; That the singing of the praises of God is useful and reasonable: That the Sacrament of the Body and Blood of JESUS CHRIST ought to be celebrated in the Church, and that the Words of its Institution, ought to be understood in a proper and not in a figurative Sense: That Baptism is necessary for Salvation, and that it ought even to be administer'd to young Children: That Repentance is likewise necessary for those who have fallen into Sin, and that it is composed of three Parts, viz. Contrition, Confession and Satisfaction, and that it is requisite to make Confession to a Priest. He refutes in particular the Custom that was in use among those Hereticks in the imposition of Hands, which they call Consolation, and which they administer'd in the following manner:

The Superior amongst those People, after having wash'd his Hands, took the Book of the Gospels, and exhorted those, who came to receive the Consolation, to put their whole trust and hope of their Salvation therein, and afterwards laying the Book of the Gospels on their Head, repeated Seven times, the Lord's Prayer and the beginning of St. John's Gospel from In principio to these Words, Gratia & Veritas per Jesum Christum facta est i. e. Grace and Truth came by Jesus Christ. Thus ended the Ceremony of their Consolation; but if it should happen that no Superior is present, then one of the Comforted performs the same Ceremony, and even Women do it to sick Persons in the absence of Men: They believe that this Consolation remits Sins, even mortal ones, and that without it 'tis impossible to be Saved: Lastly, they maintain, that those who have actually committed a mortal Sin, are incapable of administering it effectually. Afterwards Ermen-gard proves against them, that 'tis lawful to eat Flesh, and to take an Oath, and establishes the Doctrines of the Resurrection of the Dead, the Invocation of Saints, and Prayers for deceased Persons.

These three Authors scarce make use of any other Proofs but Passages of the Holy Scripture to confute the Errors they oppose, and to establish the Truths they maintain; nay they produce a great number of them, amongst which there are some which do not clearly prove, what they assert.

CHAP. XII.

Of the Ecclesiastical Authors of less note, who flourish'd in the Western Countries in the Twelfth Century.

AFTER having treated in the preceding Chapter of the most noted Ecclesiastical Writers, whose Works are more numerous, or more considerable, we shall now give some account in this, of a great number of others less known, who have compos'd divers small Tracts, reserving the particular enumeration of the Historians and Greek Authors, for the following Chapters.

ANSELM, Dean of the Church of Laon, flourish'd in the beginning of the Century, and Anselm made publick Divinity-Lectures at Chalons, in which he gave Explications of the Holy Dean of Scripture. He is also supposed to be in part the Author of the Ordinary Gloss. Some at Laon tribute to him the Commentaries on the Book of Canticles, on St. Matthew's Gospel, on St. Paul's Epistles, and on the Revelation of St. John, which were printed under the Name of St. Anselm Arch-bishop of Canterbury, but they really belong to Hervaeus a Monk of Bourg near Dol, whose Name they bear in the Manuscripts.

GISLEBERT or GILBERT, surnam'd CRISPIN, St. Anselm's Pupil, after having fol- Gislebert low'd his Study in the Abbey of Beo, took a Journey to Rome; and upon his return, had a or Gilbert Conference with a certain Jew of Mentz. Afterwards he was made Abbot of Westminster, Crispin, A. D. 1106. He wrote a Relation of that Conference, and dedicated it to St. Anselm, amongst whose Works it is inserted in the last Edition by Father Gerberton. Dr. Cave assures us, That there are still extant in the Libraries of England, divers Manuscript Homilies written by Gilbert Crispin on the Book of Canticles, and several Discourses on St. Ferom's Prefaces to the Bible, with a particular Treatise against the Sins of Thought, Word and Deed. The Relation of the Conference made by this Author, is different from that which is annexed to St. Augustin's Works, under the Title of, The Contest between the Synagogue and the Church, and is much more accurate. He died A. D. 1114. as some Writers averr, or according to others in 1115.

PETRUS ALPHONSUS, a Spanish Jew, who formerly bore the name of Moses, was Petrus converted A. D. 1106. was baptiz'd at Huesca, and had Alphonfus King of Portugal for Alphon- his God-father. He compos'd a Treatise by way of Dialogue between a Jew and a Chris- fus, a Spa- tian, concerning the Truth of the Christian Religion, divided into Twelve Chapters; in nish Jew the first of which he shews, That the Jews explain the Writings of the Prophets too car- converted. nally, and that they mistake their meaning: In the second, he makes it appear, that the Cause of the Captivity of the Jews, is the putting of the Messiah to death; that it was foretold by the Prophets, and that it will not cease till the end of the World. In the third, he confutes the Opinion of the Jews, who believe, that their dead shall be rais'd again one day to dwell on the Earth, and that they shall multiply therein. In the fourth, he proves that the Jews do no longer observe the principal Articles of the Law of Moses, and that what they do observe, is not acceptable to God. In the fifth Chapter, which is written against the Mahometan Superstitions; he shews, that Mahomet was a false Prophet, who wrought no Miracles, and was destitute of Learning, Religion and Probity. In the sixth, he proves the Doctrine of the Trinity, by Passages of the old Testament. In the seventh, he demonstrates by the Writings of the Prophets, That the Messiah was to be born of a Virgin, and conceiv'd by the Operation of the Holy Ghost. In the eighth, That the Word of God was made Man, and that CHRIST is God and Man. In the ninth, That JESUS CHRIST came at the time foretold by the Prophets, and that the Prophecies concerning the Messiah are accomplish'd in him. In the Tenth, That he died voluntarily to redeem Mankind, according to the prediction of the Prophets. In the eleventh, That he arose again from the dead, and ascended into Heaven. And in the twelfth, That the Law of the Christians is not contrary to that of the Jews. This Treatise is one of the best that we have of that kind, and the Author handles these Matters very methodically, with a great deal of clearness and solidity of Argument.

THIBAUD or THEOBALD, Clerk of the Church of Etampes, and afterwards Professor Theobald of Divinity in the Schools of Caen and Oxford, flourish'd in the beginning of the Century. Clerk of the and wrote several Letters, which were publish'd by Father Dachery in the Third Tomé of Church of his Spicilegium. Etampes.

The First is written to the Bishop of Lincoln, about certain Persons who were doubtful of the Mercy of God: He shews, That a Sinner may have recourse to Repentance at all times; That he may obtain the Remission of his Sins, and that a good Disposition is sufficient for an entire Conversion.

A New Ecclesiastical History

In the Second, directed to Faricius Abbot of Abbington; he proves, That Children who die without receiving Baptism are damned.

The Third, is a Complimental Letter to Margaret Queen of England.

The Fourth, is a Consolatory Letter to one of his Friends, who was unjustly slandered.

The Last Letter is written against Roscelin; in which he shews, That the Sons of Priests are incapable of being admitted into Holy Orders.

RADULPHUS Armam'd ARDENS, a Native of Poitiers and Chaplain to William III. Duke of Aquitaine, flourish'd in the beginning of this Century. He compos'd a great number of Sermons on the Sundays and Festivals of the Year, printed at Paris, A. D. 1568. & 1583. at Antwerp in 1576. and at Colen in 1604.

ODO, Abbot of St. Martin at Tournay, was ordain'd Bishop of Cambray, A. D. 1105. and expell'd for refusing to receive the Investiture from the Emperor Henry IV. He retir'd to Doway and died there in 1113. He wrote a Commentary upon the Canon of the Mass, in which he explains the Text literally, with a kind of Paraphrase: Three very Scholastick Books concerning Original Sin: A Treatise in form of a Dialogue against a Jew, touching the necessity of the Incarnation of the Son of God, and of the Grace of JESUS CHRIST: Another of the Sin against the Holy Ghost: A Tract to explain the Harmony of the Evangelists, and a Sermon on the Parable of the unjust Steward. There is a great deal of Philosophy in these Treatises.

GILBERT, Bishop of Limerick in Ireland, and the Pope's Legate in that Country, held a Council there A. D. 1110. to regulate the Limits of the Bishopricks of that Kingdom, and assisted in 1115. at the Ordination of Bernard Bishop of St. David's, which was perform'd at Westminster. But being no longer able to discharge the Functions of his Legateship, he resign'd it to the Pope in 1139. and died a little while after. He wrote a small Tract about the State of the Church, and two Letters, viz. one to the Bishops and Priests of Ireland, and the other to St. Anselm Arch-bishop of Canterbury, which are inserted in the Collection of the Letters of Ireland, publish'd by Arch-bishop Usher.

FRANCO, the second Abbot of the Monastery of Afflighem near Bruxels, compos'd in the beginning of the Century, Twelve Books concerning the Grace and Mercy of God, which contain an History of the principal Benefices that God has bestow'd on Men from the Creation of the World, to the day of everlasting Happiness: A Letter in which he shews, That a Monk, who has quitted his Habit and Profession cannot be saved: Another Letter directed to certain Nuns, to serve them instead of a Consolation and Exhortation. The Poetical Piece about the Glory of the future State, apparently is not different from certain Copies of Verses on that Subject, which are to be found at the end of his Twelfth Book of the Grace of God; but his Sermons on the Virgin Mary, mention'd by Trithemius, are no longer extant. This Author was made Abbot, A. D. 1111. and died under Pope Innocent II. He began these Works being as yet a simple Monk and completed them, when advanc'd to the Dignity of an Abbot.

WILLIAM de CHAMPEAUX, so call'd from the Name of the Village of Champeaux near Melun in the Province of Brie, after having apply'd himself to study at Laon under Anselm Dean of the Cathedral Church of that City, was ordain'd Arch-deacon of Paris, and appointed to read Lectures of Logick in the Schools of that Church. Some time after, he retir'd with some of his Pupils to a Monastery, in which was St. Victor's Chappel near Paris, and there founded the Abbey of Regular Canons. He continu'd to teach in that Convent, and (as it is generally believ'd) was the first publick Professor of Scholastick Divinity. He was made Bishop of Chalons, A. D. 1113. and died in the end of the Month of January, 1121. 'Tis very probable, that being a Person of so great Learning, he wrote some Works, yet we have none of them in our Possession: For the Dialogue between a Christian and a Jew, which was publish'd under his Name in the Bibliotheca Patrum of the last Edition at Lyons, belongs to Gilbert of Westminster. However, 'tis reported that he wrote a Book of Sentences before Peter Lombard, of which a Manuscript Copy is still kept in the Library of Notre Dame at Paris.

STEPHEN, ordain'd Bishop of Autun in the Year 1113. left that Bishoprick in 1129. to turn Monk in the Abbey of Cluny, and spent the rest of his Life there. He is the Author of a Treatise concerning the Prayers and Ceremonies of the Mass, and about the Functions of the Ministers of the Altar, set forth by John de Montalon, Canon and Chanter of Autun, and infered in the Bibliotheca Patrum.

GAUTIER or GAUTERIUS, Bishop of Maguelone in Languedoc and the Pope's Legate, govern'd that Bishoprick from A. D. 1103. to 1129. He publish'd in the beginning of the Century a Treatise call'd Flowers on the Psalms, compos'd by Letbert or Lietbert Abbot of St. Rufus, and dedicated it to Robert Provost of Liste, his Kinsman, and to the Chapter of that Church, by an Epistle which Father Mabillon has set forth in the first Tome of his Analec'ta.

DROGO or DREUX, Prior of St. Nicasius at Rheims, was constituted the first Abbot Drogo of St. John at Laon, by Bartholomew Bishop of that City, A. D. 1128. and afterwards invited Cardinal to Rome in 1136. by Pope Innocent II. who made him a Cardinal and Bishop of Ostia. He wrote the following Tracts, viz. a Sermon on the Passion of JESUS CHRIST: A Treatise of the Creation and Redemption of the first Man: Another of the seven Gifts of the Holy Ghost, and a third on the Divine Offices. This Author died in 1138.

PETER the Library keeper of Mount Cassin, was put into that Monastery, A. D. 1115. Peter being then aged only eleven Years, by his Father nam'd Giles, who was descended of a noble Family at Rome. After having compleated his Studies under the Abbot Girard, of Mount Cassin from whom he receiv'd the Monastick Habit, he was made Deacon of the Church of Ostia, and Library keeper of Mount Cassin. He was turn'd out of that Monastery in 1128. through the envy of his Collegues; and afterwards employ'd in several Negotiations by the Emperor Lotharius, who gave him good Entertainment in his Court, and constituted him his Chaplain and Secretary of State: He compos'd a Treatise of the Illustrious Personages of Mount Cassin, printed at Rome in 1655. and inserted in the last Bibliotheca Patrum. He is likewise the Author of the Fourth Book of the Chronicle of Mount Cassin, and of another Tract about the Roman Letters, dedicated to the Emperor Conrad, which was printed at Venice in 1525. In the last Chapter of his Treatise of Illustrious Personages, he gives us a Catalogue of his Works; in which are reckon'd up, the Lives of divers Saints; several Sermons; the History of the famous Men of Mount Cassin; an Exposition of St. Benedict's Rule; certain Scholæ or Notes on the Old Testament; and Hymns; divers Books relating to History or Humane Learning, and some Letters.

His Book of the Illustrious Personages of Mount Cassin, was continu'd by RICHARD Abbot of that Monastery, who died in the following Century. These two Writers (after St. Jerom's Example) usually produce a Catalogue of the Works of those Authors who are mention'd by them.

ANSELM, Bishop of Havelberg, in the Marquisate of Brandenburg, flourish'd under the Emperor Lotharius II. who sent him in quality of his Ambassador to the Court of the Greek Emperor at Constantinople. He had divers Conferences there, about Matters of Religion, which were afterwards collected by him, and committed to writing in three Books, dedicated to Pope Eugenius III. This Work was publish'd by Father Luke Dachery in the Thirteenth Tome of his Spicilegium. In the first Book, he shews, That Faith was always the same, even from the Creation of the World, although Customs and the particular manner of Living were different. He applies to the seven States of the Church, what is express'd in the Apocalypse, concerning the opening of the seven Seals, and the Horses that went out as they were open'd. The first is that of the Primitive Church, famous for its Miracles, and the purity of the Faith and Manners of the Believers: The second is that of the Church, persecuted by the Jews and Gentiles: The third is that of the Church, infected by Heresies: The fourth is that of the Church, full of false Brethren and Hypocrites; to whom he opposes the Orders of Monks and Regular Canons: The fifth is the State of the Souls of the Righteous, who are at rest, waiting for the Resurrection: The sixth is the Persecution raised by Antichrist; and the last is the State of everlasting Happiness. In the second Book, compos'd by way of Dialogue, between himself and an Arch-bishop of Nicomedia; he confutes the Opinion of the Greeks, touching the Procession of the Holy Ghost, and discusses divers Questions relating to the Mystery of the Trinity. The third is likewise written in form of a Conference with the same Arch-bishop, about the other Controversies that were on foot, between the Greeks and the Latins; more especially as to what concerns the use of Unleaven'd Bread, in the sacred Mysteries, Primacy, and the Authority of the Church of Rome, which he vigorously maintains. In like manner, he inveighs against the Custom of the Greeks, who were wont to put no Water in the Chalice, till after the Consecration, and censures another Custom that prevail'd among them, viz. to make use of Unction, upon the reception of those Latins, who were admitted into their Communion. Lastly, a General Council is propos'd on both sides to procure the Re-union of the two Churches. This Treatise is learned and very accurately written.

HERVÆUS, a Benedictin Monk of Dol, flourish'd in the Year of our Lord 1130. He wrote a Commentary on St. Paul's Epistles, which is annex'd to St. Anselm's Works of the Colen Edition. Father Labbe assures us, that there is also extant a large Manuscript Commentary on the Prophecy of Isaiab by this Author, in the Library of the College of Clermont. An account of his Life is continu'd in a Circulatory Letter written by the Monks of that Monastery after his death. They also produce a Catalogue of his Works; which are, an Exposition of the Book call'd, The Hierarchy of the Angels, attributed to St. Dionysius the Areopagite: Certain Commentaries on the Book of Isaiab, on the Lamentations of Jeremiah, on the end of the Prophecy of Ezekiel, on the Books of Deuteronomy, Ecclesiastes, Judges, Ruth and Tobit; in which he applies himself to illustrate the literal Sense, for the benefit of Persons of a mean Capacity: A large Commentary on St. Paul's Epistles: Another on the Twelve lesser Prophets, and on the Book of Genesis: Divers Sermons on the Gospels, and on some of the Canticles: A Treatise of the Lessons, that are read in the Churches, in which he shews the different readings of those Lessons from the Sacred Text: A Book of the Miracles

Miracles of the Virgin Mary; and an Explication of the Treatise of the Lord's Supper, attributed to St. Cyprian.

Hugh de
Foliet a
Corby.

HUGH de FOLIET, a Monk of Corby, flourish'd A. D. 1130. and compos'd divers Treatises, which are ascrib'd to Hugh of St. Victor, viz. The four Books of the Cloister of the Soul: That of the Physick of the Soul: The two first Books of Birds, dedicated to Rainier: Two Books of the Carnal and Spiritual Wedding: A Treatise of the stunning of Marriage: And a Piece call'd, The Sinner's Mirrour, printed among the supposititious Works of St. Augustin.

Stephen
Paris.

STEPHEN, Bishop of Paris, had a Contest in the Year 1132. with an Arch-deacon of his Diocess, who had unadvisedly suspended the People of his Arch-deaconry from Divine Service, and with Stephen de Guirande his Adversary. These Quarrels are the Subject of divers Letters written by this Prelate, by Henry Arch-bishop of Sens, by Geoffrey Bishop of Chartres, by the Clergy of Paris, and by some others, which are inserted in the Third Tome of Father Dachery's Spicilegium, page 153. & sequ.

Hugh
of Roan.

HUGH pass'd over from Amiens, the place of his Nativity, into England, and was made Abbot of Redding in that Kingdom. Afterwards he was chosen Arch-bishop of Roan, and consecrated A. D. 1130. He was one of the greatest, most pious, and most learned Prelates of his time, and govern'd the Church of Roan with a great deal of Reputation, to the Year 1164. which was that of his death. He wrote three Books to serve as an Instruction for the Clergy of his Diocess, against the Hereticks of his time. In the first, after having explain'd in a few Words, what ought to be believ'd concerning the Trinity and the Incarnation; he treats of the Sacraments of Baptism, Confirmation, and the Lord's Supper, and confutes the Errors of those Hereticks, who deny the necessity of Baptism, more especially of that of Infants, and the usefulness and necessity of the Eucharist. In the second, he treats of Holy Orders, and of Ecclesiastical Functions. In the last, he discourses of the Dignity of the Clergy; Of the Manners of Clerks; Of the Celibacy which they are oblig'd to observe; Of the Vow of Chastity; Of Unity, and of other Marks of the Catholick Church. There are also two Letters written by this Arch-bishop, viz. one dedicated to Thierry or Theodoric Bishop of Amiens, concerning the Absolution that was granted to Penitents, who took care of the building of the Church, provided they made Confession of their Sins, did Penance, and were reconcil'd with their Enemies: The second is a complimentary Letter to the Count of Toulouse. These Pieces were publish'd by Father Luke Dachery, at the end of the Works of Guibert of Nogent.

Hugh Me-
Regular Canon.

HUGO METELLUS, a Regular Canon of the Abbey of St. Leon in the Diocess of Toul, and the Pupil of St. Anselm at Laon, flourish'd in the beginning of this Century, and wrote divers Letters which are to be found in Manuscript, in the Library of the Jesuits College at Clermont. Father Mabillon caus'd one of them to be printed in the Third Tome of his Analeccta, which was directed to a certain Monk nam'd Gerard or Gerland; and in which he proves the real Presence of the Body of JESUS CHRIST in the Eucharist, and answers the Passages of St. Augustin, on which that Monk grounded his Doubts, as to that Article.

Thomas
Abbot of Maurigny
Bernard
Monk of Cluny.

THOMAS, Abbot of Maurigny, wrote a Letter to St. Bernard, which is contain'd in the Miscellaneous Works by M. Baluzius, Tom. 4. p. 459.

Under the Tuition of Peter, Abbot of Cluny, there was a certain English Monk of that Convent, nam'd BERNARD, who dedicated to him three Books on the Contempt of the World, in riming Verse. This Work was printed at several times in Germany, particularly at Bremen in 1597. and at Luneburg in 1640.

Ulger
Bishop of Angers.

ULGER, Bishop of Angers, sent a Letter to Pope Innocent II. on behalf of the Abbey of St. Mary at Roe, which was at variance with that of Vendome, about the Right they claim'd to a certain Church. This Prelate not only obtain'd his Request of the Pope, but also a peculiar Privilege in favour of the Abbey of Roe, and another for his own Church at Angers. This Letter and a Copy of those two Privileges were set forth by M. Baluzius in the second Tome of his Miscellaneous Works. Ulger likewise made an Encomium in Verse on Marbodius Bishop of Rennes, which is prefix'd to the Works of that Author.

Rodul-
phus Abbot of St.
Trudo.

RODULPHUS, a Native of Munster, after having follow'd his Studies for some time at Liege, travell'd into Germany, during which Journey, he took a Resolution to embrace the Monastick Life, and enter'd divers Monasteries: But finding none that were well regulated, he retir'd at last to that of St. Trudo or St. Tron in the Diocess of Liege, which was less irregular than the others, and the Instruction of the young Monks was committed to his Care. Thierry, who was then Abbot, chose him for Prior; and they both us'd their utmost endeavours jointly to bring about an entire Reformation of that Monastery. Upon the death of Thierry, Rodolphus was elected Abbot in his place, A. D. 1108. but his Monastery was pillag'd and burnt a little while after. However, he restor'd it to its former State, yet was expell'd from thence, and took two Journeys to Rome. He in like manner reform'd the Monastery of St. Pantaleon at Colen, made Sibert one of the Monks of his Abbey, Prior of it, and died after the Year 1136.

Rodolphus

Rodolphus Compos'd a Chronicle of the Abbey of St. Trudo, from its first Foundation to the Year 1136. which was publish'd by Father Dachery, in the Seventh Tome of the Spicilegium. It is very large, and divided into Thirteen Books, the Five last of which contain a Relation of the Affairs that were Transacted in his time in that Abbey.

He is likewise the Author of the Life of St. Lietbert, Bishop of Cambray, which is annexed at the end of the Seventh Tome of the Spicilegium. Besides, these Pieces, he compos'd several other Works, more especially a Treatise against Simonists, divided into Seven Books, which Father Mabillon found in Manuscript in the Library of Gembloux, with a Letter written by Sibert, Prior of St. Pantaleon, to Rodolphus, and the Answer that was made to it by the latter.

We shall here subjoin the Arguments of the Books of Simony, as they are related by Father Mabillon. Rodolphus shews in the First Book, that Simony is the first and greatest Heresie. In the Second, he complains of an Abuse that was then predominant, viz. that there was nothing that belong'd to the House of God, that was not expos'd to Sale. In the Third, he gives an account, after what manner Spiritual Livings are dispos'd of in the Country: In the Fourth, he describes the manner of Trading for Prebends, and other more considerable Benefices. In the Fifth, he says, that perhaps it might be objected against him, that he endeavour'd to conceal the Simoniackal Practices that were committed by the Monks, and relates the Censures that were pass'd frequently upon them. In the Last, he returns an Answer to the Objections, and clears them from that Imputation.

Father Mabillon has publish'd a certain Letter written by SIBERT, of whom we have Sibert, already made mention, and Rodolphus's Answer. Sibert is desirous to be inform'd by that Prior of St. Pantaleon, what Answer ought to be made to a certain rich and covetous Person, who design'd to put his Son into the Monastery of St. Pantaleon, without giving him his Portion; on that is to say, whether the Monks ought to exact any thing of the Party, or to receive him Gratis. Rodolphus does two things in his Reply: On the one side, he condemns the Avarice of that rich Man, and accuses him of a kind of Sacrilege, in regard that having determined to dedicate his Son to God, he denies him that share of his Estate, which belongs to him by right of Inheritance: He observes also, that the Monasteries are not establish'd for the benefit of Opulent Families, but to receive and maintain the Poor, who are devoted to the Service of God. On the other side, Rodolphus does not allow the Monks to exact any thing for the Reception of Children, and says, That they would do well to admonish their Parents, that 'tis their Duty to offer part of the Hereditary Portion of their Children, but that they ought not to be Constrain'd to do it by force: That as the Monastery may either admit or reject a Monk according to Discretion; so the Parents ought to be left at liberty, either to bestow Children in such a manner, or to retain them, and that nothing can be exacted for the Admission of a Monk, without incurring the Guilt of Simony. For (says he) every Thing that is exacted, or is demanded, or even every Thing that is done in hopes of getting a Recompence, as for what relates to Ecclesiastical Affairs, is Simony, and altho' it does not appear so to the Eyes of Men, nevertheless 'tis look'd upon as such by God. At the end of this Letter, a Discourse is subjoin'd, in which he advises those who take upon them the Monastick Vows, to divide their Estate into three Parts; to the end, that one may be given to the Poor, another to the Monastery where they retire, and the third to be left to their Family. He likewise exhorts Parents who would make their Sons Monks, to allow them some part of their Hereditary Portion to be brought along with them into the Monastery, where they are admitted.

Rodolphus wrote in an indifferent good Style, was well vers'd in the Canon Law and Ecclesiastical Constitutions, and had perus'd the Writings of the Latin Fathers.

WASELINUS, surnam'd MOMALIUS, Prior of the Monastery of St. Laurence, in the Waselinus Suburbs of Liege, who died A. D. 1147. wrote a Letter directed to Gaufelin, Abbot of St. Momalium, Florin, in the same Diocess, in which he Debates this Question, viz. Whether a Man and Prior of St. Laurence his Wife, who have coupl'd together Carnally in the Night preceding a Festival, may receive the Communion the next Day? He makes it appear by many Arguments and Authorities cited to that purpose, that Continency is enjoyn'd those Persons who are desirous to partake of the Holy Sacraments; nevertheless, he is of Opinion that those, who having fallen in the Night into that inconvenience thro' frailty, may be admitted to the Communion, provided they beg Pardon of God the next day, make Confession of their Offence; and do Penance for it. Lastly, he leaves it to the Discretion of the Priest, either to permit them to Communicate, or to deny them that Privilege. This Letter was Publish'd by Father Mabillon, in the first Tome of his Analecta.

AMEDEUS, Abbot of Haute-Combe, a Monastery of the Cistercian Order, and sometime Amedeus, Bishop of Lausanna, viz. from A. D. 1144. to 1149. is reputed to be the Author of Eight Bishop of Sermons, in Commendation of the Virgin Mary, which were Printed at first at Basil, Lausanna in 1537. afterwards Publish'd by Richard Gibson, Jesuit, Printed at Antwerp, in 1600. and inserted in the Collection of Sermons written by St. Leo, and other Fathers, as also in the Bibliotheca Patrum.

POTHO, a Monk of Prom, flourish'd under the Emperor Conrad, and wrote Five very Mystical Books, on the State of the House of God, that is to say, of the Church-Militant and Triumphant, in which he produces a great number of very abstruse Notions, as well as in another Treatise call'd, The Palace of Wisdom.

PHILIP, Bishop of Taranto, the Favourite of Leo the Antipope, was depos'd upon that account in the Council of Lateran, held A. D. 1139. and retir'd to the Monastery of Clairvaux, where he receiv'd the Habit of a Monk from St. Bernard. He was made Prior of that Convent in 1150. and Six Years after, Abbot of the Alms-Monastery of the Cistercian Order, in the Diocese of Chartres. Some time before the end of his Life, he return'd to Clairvaux, and died there. Charles de Wisch, has annexed at the end of his Collection of the Authors of the Cistercian Order, Twenty five Letters, which (as he says) belong to this Philip.

SERLO, a Monk of Cerisy, chosen Abbot of Savigny, A. D. 1146. Compos'd divers Sermons which were Published by Father Tissier, in the Sixth Tome of the Bibliotheca Cisterciensis. He retir'd to Cisteaux, not long before his Death, which happen'd in 1158. There is also to be seen in M. Colbert's Library, a certain Manuscript, which contains a Treatise by Serlo, on the Lord's Prayer.

GAUTIER, or GAUTERIUS, of MAURITANIA, Bishop of Laon, flourish'd in the Year 1150. and wrote several Letters published by Father Dachery, in the Second Tome of his Spicilegium.

The First is directed to a certain Monk nam'd William, who doubted whether Children Baptized by Hereticks, receiv'd the Spiritual Grace appropriated to that Sacrament: He proves the Affirmative, because it is JESUS CHRIST, who effectually Administers Baptism.

In the Second, he explains the Mystery of the Incarnation.

In the Third, he confutes the Opinion of a certain Doctor nam'd Thierry, who maintain'd, That God was Omnipresent by his Power, but not by his Essence.

In the Fourth, he opposes the Opinion of another Doctor call'd Albericus, who asserted, That JESUS CHRIST was not afraid to Die, and was not sensible of any Grief or Trouble before his Passion. Gauterius explains, in what Sense Death might be formidable to our Saviour, and of what sort of Fear and Sorrow he was capable.

In the Fifth, he reproves Peter Abaelard, for going about to give a Definitive Explanation of the Mystery of the Trinity, and to Demonstrate it by Reason, and opposes in particular, some of the Propositions that he asserted, or which were maintain'd by his Followers.

The Last is a Letter directed to Hugh of St. Vister, and published by Father Matou, in his Notes on Robert Pullus.

WOLBERO, Abbot of St. Pantaleon at Colen, Compos'd in the Year 1150. a Commentary on the Book of Canticles, divided into Four Books, and Printed at Colen in 1650. This Pantaleon Author died in 1167.

LUKE, Abbot of St. Cornelius, of the Order of Premontre near Liege, in like manner wrote a Commentary on the Song of Solomon, which was Extracted out of that of Apenius, bot of St. and Dedicated to Milo, Bishop of Terouane. This Abbot died in 1157. and his Book was Printed at Friburg in 1538. as also in the Bibliotheca Patrum.

BARTHOLOMEW DE FOIGNY, Bishop of Laon, was suspended, A. D. 1142. by Ives, Cardinal and Pope Innocent II's Legate, for Authorizing the unlawful Divorce of Radulphus, Count of Vermandois from his Wife. Afterwards he made an entire Resignation of his Bishoprick, and enter'd into a Monastery of the Cistercian Order. He wrote a Letter to Samson, Arch-bishop of Rheims, to clear himself from an Accusation that was brought against him, for waiving the Revenues of the Bishoprick of Laon; by shewing, that what he had bestow'd on the Cathedral and on the other Churches of his Diocese, that stood in need of some Supplies, was but a very small Matter, and that his Successor, would be to blame if he depriv'd them of it. This Letter is to be found in the last Collection of the Councils, Tom. 10. p. 1184.

RADULPHUS NIGER, a Monk of St. Germer, in the Diocese of Beauvais, flourish'd A. D. 1157. and Compos'd Twenty Books of Commentaries on that of Leviticus, Printed in the Seventeenth Tome of the last Bibliotheca Patrum. Another Commentary on the Book of Canticles is likewise attributed to him, which was inserted among St. Gregory's Works; and 'tis also reported, that he wrote a Commentary on St. Paul's Epistles, an History of France, and a Chronicle; but we have no knowledge of these Works.

S. ÆLRED, or S. ETHELRED, of the Cistercian Order, Abbot of Reverby, in the Province of York in England, flourish'd in the middle of the Twelfth Century, and died A. D. 1166. He addict'd himself to a Spiritual Life, and affected to imitate St. Bernard in his manner of writing. The following Works written by him are still Extant, viz. Thirty Sermons on the Thirteenth Chapter of Isaiah, concerning the Calamities of Babylon, and of the Philistins, and Moabites: A Treatise call'd, The Mirrour of Charity, divided into Three Books, with the Abridgment of that Treatise: Three Books of the Spiritual Friendship, and and a Discourse on these Words of St. Luke, JESUS CHRIST being aged Twelve Years: A Fragment of his History of England, and Twenty five Sermons Printed in the Bibliotheca Cisterciensis. His Mirrour of Charity is a very fine Piece, full of solid Maxims on the Love of God, and on other Christian Virtues. In the Treatise of Friendship, which is Compos'd in form of a Dialogue, he shews, That there can be no true Amity, but amongst Christian and Virtuous Persons. Suavius has publish'd divers Lives of English Saints under the name of this Author, but he wrote them himself in his Style. We have also among the Historians of England the Life of St. Edward, written by St. Æthelred, and some other Historical Tracts relating to the Affairs of that Kingdom. His other Works were set forth by Gilbo the Jesuit, and printed at Doway, A. D. 1631. as also in the Bibliotheca Cisterciensis, and in the last Bibliotheca Patrum. The Rule for Nuns falsely attributed to St. Augustin, is inserted under the Name of St. Æthelred, in the Collection of Rules published by Holstenius; and Gilbert of Hoiland, has made an Encomium on the same Saint, in the Continuation of St. Augustin's Commentary on the Book of Psalms.

S. HILDEGARDA, born at Spanheim in Germany, A. D. 1098. was the Daughter of St. Hildebert and Mathilda; she received the Veil at the Age of Eight Years, and in process of time was chosen Abbess of St. Rupert's Mount near Bingen on the Rhine. The Fame of her Revelations and Miracles, procur'd her so great Reputation, that when Pope Eugenius III. came to Trier in 1148. Henry Arch-bishop of Mentz, and St. Bernard took an opportunity to acquaint him with the wonderful Operations that God perform'd by his Servant Hildegarda; insomuch that the Pope being much surpriz'd at the Relation, sent Albert Bishop of Verdun with some other Persons worthy of Credit, privately to make an Enquiry into the Truth of what was reported concerning that Nun. These Persons having interrogated her, she gave them a plain Account of her Condition, and deliver'd to them several Books, which she avouch'd to have written by Divine Inspiration. The Pope caus'd them to be read publicly in the presence of all the Prelates, and perus'd a considerable part of them himself: Whereupon all the Assistants were surpriz'd, and entreated his Holiness not to suffer so great a Light to be extinguish'd. Then the Pope wrote a Letter to Hildegarda, to Congratulate her upon account of those transcendent Graces which God had bestow'd on her, and to exhort her to preserve them; granting her at the same time a permission to reside in the Place that she had chosen, to lead a Regular course of Life with the other Nuns, according to St. Benedict's Rule. The Popes who succeeded Eugenius, viz. Anastasius IV. Adrian IV. and Alexander III. honour'd her in like manner with their Letters and Admonitions, as well as the Arch-bishops of Mentz, Colen, Trier, Saltsburg, and many other Prelates of Germany, not to mention the Emperors Conrad and Frederick: She returned an Answer to their Letters, without deviating from her Character, that is to say, in a Mystical and Prophetical Style. The Collection of all these Letters is still Extant, with divers Visions directed to particular Persons; Answers to several Questions about the Holy Scriptures, and certain Explications of St. Benedict's Rule, and of St. Athanasius's Creed. These Works were printed at Colen, A. D. 1566. and in the Bibliotheca Patrum. There are also Three Books of Revelations which bear the name of this Saint, printed with those of St. Thierry, Brigit at Paris, in 1533. and at Colen, in 1628. St. Hildegarda died in 1180. and her Life was written in 1200. by Thierry or Theodoric, an Abbot of the same Order of St. Benedict.

S. ELIZABETH, Abbess of Schenaw, in the Diocese of Trier, near the Monastery of St. Florin, which her Brother Ecbert govern'd in Quality of Abbot, was likewise famous for her Revelations. She flourish'd A. D. 1155. and died in 1165. aged 36 Years. There are Three Books of Visions or Revelations, written by this Saint, and a Volume of Letters printed at Colen, in 1628. Her Brother ECBERT Compos'd, besides the Thirteen Discourses, against the Cathari, of which we have already made mention, the Life of his Sister, which is prefix'd to her Revelations: 'Tis also reported that he was the Author of some other Florin Letters.

ODO, a Regular Canon of St. Augustin, wrote A. D. 1160. Seven Letters about the Duties and Functions of Regular Canons, which are inserted in the Second Tome of the Specilegium, by Father Luke Dachery.

JOHN of CORNWALL, had Peter Lombard for his Tutor, but afterwards fell at variance with him upon several occasions. He studied for a long time at Rome, and obtained a great share of the Favours of Pope Alexander III. We have not any of his Works printed, but Dr. Cave mentions two Manuscript Treatises of this Author, viz. one Dedicated to Pope Alexander, under the Title of A Discussion of Humane Philosophy, and of Heresies; and the other call'd A Summary of the Manner how the Sacrament of the Altar is made by the Vertue of the Cross, and of the Seven Canons or Orders of the Mass.

In the time of Pope Alexander III. FOLMAR, Provost of Trieffenstein, near Wurtzburg in Franconia, was accus'd of maintaining the Errors of Nestorius and Eupandus, concerning the Person and Adoption of JESUS CHRIST, and of spreading them abroad in Bavaria. Two Monks of that Country, viz. GEROCHUS, Provost of the Abbey of Reichersperg,

A New Ecclesiastical History

Gerochus, Reichenberg, and another who was Dean of the same Monastery, wrote against him; the Provost of former in a Treatise of Antichrist, and the other in a Book written on purpose. Their Works are still Extant in the Libraries of Germany, according to the report of Stewart, who assures us, that they are worthy to be brought to light; altho' those Authors seem to have fallen into an Error directly oppositè to that of the Eutychians, or Ubiquitarians, in maintaining, That the Divine Perfections pass'd into the Humane Nature of JESUS CHRIST, and that the latter is become equal to the Godhead. Stewart has produc'd in his Collection the Epistle Dedicatory of the Dean of Reichenberg's Treatise, directed to Henry, Dean of the Church of Wurtzburg, and it is also inserted in the Twenty third Tome of the last Edition of the Bibliotheca Patrum.

GILBERT FOLIOT, an English Man by Nation, and Abbot of Liecester, was translated A. D. 1161. from the Bishoprick of Hereford, which he obtain'd in 1149. to that of London, and was one of the principal Adversaries of Thomas Becket, Arch-bishop of Canterbury. He wrote a Commentary on the Book of Canticles, which was publish'd by Junius, and printed in Quarto at London, in 1638. There are also Seven of his Letters in the Collection of those of Thomas Becket. He died in 1187.

PHILIP of HARVENGE, Abbot of Bonne Esperance, of the Order of Premontre in Hainaut, surnam'd the Alm-giver, by reason of his extraordinary liberality to the Poor, flourish'd A. D. 1150. and died in 1180. His Works were published by Nicolas Chamart, Abbot of Bonne Esperance, and printed at Douay, in 1621. according to the following Catalogue, viz. Twenty one Letters: A Commentary on the Canticles: Moral Observations on the same Book. Several Discourses on King Nebuchadnezzar's Dream, on Adam's Fall, and on the Damnation of King Solomon: Six Treatises of the Dignity, Learning, Uprightness, Continency, Obedience, and Silence of Clergy men. A Relation of the Lives of St. Augustin, Bishop of Hippo, and of St. Amand, Abbot of Tongres: The Passion of St. Cyricius, and St. Julitta, with that of St. Salvius: The Lives of St. Foillan, St. Giffen, St. Landelin, St. Ida, and St. Valtruda: The Passion of St. Agnes in Elegiack Verse, with divers other Poetical Pieces, and some Epitaphs.

ADAMUS SCOTUS, a Regular Canon of St. Augustin, of the Order of Premontre, flourish'd A. D. 1160. and died in 1180. He Compos'd a Commentary on St. Augustin's Rule: A Treatise of the Triple Tabernacle of Moses: Another of the three kinds of Contemplation, and Forty seven Sermons. Those Works were printed at Antwerp in 1695. and Father Ouden says, That he saw Fifty three other Sermons, and a Soliloquy of the Soul, by the same Author, in the Library of the Celestine Fathers of Mante.

JOANNES BURGUNDUS, a Magistrate and Citizen of Pisa, was sent to Constantinople, to negotiate certain Affairs for that Republick at the Court of the Emperor Manuel Comnenus, where he met with some Copies of St. Chrysostom's Homilies, on St. John and St. Matthew, and translated them into Latin. He likewise translated St. John Damascenus's Treatise of the Orthodox Faith, and Nemesius's Eight Books of Philosophy. The latter of those Works was printed at Strasburg, in 1512. This Author flourish'd in 1150. and died in 1184. His Translations are not very polite, but extremely faithful.

PETER of RIGA, Chanter and Canon of the Church of Rheims, flourish'd A. D. 1170. He Compos'd Seven Books under the Title of Aurora, which contain the Two Books of Kings, and the Four Gospels in Verse, according to the Literal and Allegorical Sense. This Piece is still to be found in the Libraries; and Father Oudin assures us, That he had them all ready to be printed. However the Publick may well excuse him from taking that pains, without suffering much detriment; in regard that such sort of Works are of no great usefulness.

HENRY, Arch-bishop of Rheims, dispatch'd two Letters, A. D. 1170. in favour of Dreux, Chancellor of the Church of Noyon, whom Pope Alexander III. determin'd to condemn, viz. one to the Cardinals, and the other to the Pope himself: They are both written with a great deal of Freedom, and he complains, that notwithstanding the signal Services he had done to the Holy See, so little regard was had to Persons, for whom he had a particular Esteem. However the Pope, return'd a very Civil Answer, without granting his Request, shewing, That if he did not do what was expected, it ought not to be infer'd from thence, that he was not desirous by all means to give him Satisfaction; but that the present Conjunction of Affairs, would not admit of such a Compliance. Both the Letters written by this Arch-bishop, were publish'd by M. Baluzius, in the Second Tome of his Miscellaneous Works.

ROBERTUS PAULULUS, a Priest of Amiens, Compos'd A. D. 1178. Three Books of the Offices of the Church, which were printed seperately, and under the Name of Hugh of St. Victor, among the Works of that Author. The Treatise call'd the Canon of the Mystical Purification, which is also inserted among the Works of Hugh of St. Victor, ought in like manner to be restor'd to the same Robert of Amiens.

MAURICE, surnam'd DE SULLY, from a small Town of that Name, situated on the River Loire, (which was the place of his Nativity) was Born of mean Parentage, nevertheless upon account of his singular Merits and extraordinary Learning, he was promoted to the Bishoprick of Paris, A. D. 1164. after the Death of Peter Lombard. Henricus Gandavensis assures affures us, that he compos'd Sermons for all the Sundays and Festivals of the Year, and certain Instructions for the Priests of his Diocese; the Manuscript Copies of which are kept in the French King's Library, and in that of St. Victor. He died A. D. 1196. and was bury'd in the Abbey of St. Victor.

GERVASE, a Priest of Chichester, one of the Favourers of Thomas Becket Arch-bishop of Canterbury, was in good repute for his Learning, and wrote a Commentary on the Prophet Malachy, which (as we are informed by M. James) was kept in the Lomley Library.

ODO, of the County of Kent, Prior of the Monastery of Canterbury, and afterwards Abbot of Bel, was likewise the Friend and Protector of Thomas Becket. He wrote divers Works, but we have none left, except a certain Letter directed to his Brother a Novice in the Abbey of Igné, in which he exhorts him speedily to assume the Monastick Habit. This Letter was published by Father Mabillon in the first Tome of his Analecra.

LABORANTIUS, Cardinal with the Title of St. Mary, who flourish'd in the Year 1180. Laborantius compos'd a Collection of Canons: A Treatise of Justice and Equity divided into four Parts, and dedicated to the Governor of Sicily: Another to Hugh Arch-bishop of Palermo: A Letter directed to the same Hugh against the Sabellians: And another Letter to Vivian Cardinal of St. Stephen concerning Appeals. All these Pieces are contain'd in a certain Manuscript of St. Peter's Church at Rome, cited by Baronius and Possevinus.

ALULPHUS, a Monk of St. Martin at Tewney, compil'd a Collection of Sentences and Maxims, taken out of the Works of St. Gregory, and call'd it The Gregorial. It is extant in Manuscript in several Libraries, and Father Mabillon has produced the Preface to it in the First Tome of his Analecra.

BALDWIN, a Native of Exeter, in the County of Devon; of a School-Master, became an Arch-Deacon, afterwards turn'd Monk, and was made Abbot of Ferden: From that Abbey he was translated to the Bishoprick of Winchester, A. D. 1181. and at last advanc'd to the dignity of Arch-bishop of Canterbury in 1185. He accompany'd King Richard I. in his Expedition to the Holy Land, and died there in 1191. or 1192. 'Tis reported that Pope Urban sent him a Letter, the Superscription of which was to this effect: To Baldwin a most zealous Monk, a fervent Abbot, a lukewarm Bishop, and an effeminate Arch-bishop. The following Works written by this Prelate are contain'd in the fifth Tome of the Bibliotheca Cisterciensis set forth by Father Tissier, viz. sixteen Treatises of Piety on different Subjects, particularly, on the Love of God, the twofold Resurrection, the efficacy of the Word of God, the Angelical Salutation, &c. A Treatise of the recommendation of Faith: And another of the Sacrament of the Altar dedicated to Bartholomew Bishop of Exeter.

ISAAC, Abbot of L'Etoile, of the Cistercian Order in the Diocese of Poitiers, flourish'd in the end of the Century: He compos'd divers Sermons publish'd in the sixth Tome of the Bibliotheca Cisterciensis, with a Treatise of the Spirit and the Soul, attributed to St. Augustin: He is also reputed to be the Author of a certain Letter on the Canon of the Mass, which is contain'd in the first Tome of the Spicilegium.

The Abbey of Clairvaux, has produc'd in the end of this Century three Abbots who may be reckon'd amongst the Ecclesiastical Writers, viz. HENRY the seventh Abbot, who wrote Peter and a Treatise call'd, De peregrinante Civitate Dei, and some Letters. PETER the eighth Abbot, Garnier who was the Author of some Letters, and GARNIER his Successor, who compos'd divers Sermons. If any Persons are desirous to consult those Works, they may have recourse to the third Tome of the Bibliotheca Cisterciensis.

GILBERT OF SEMPRINGHAM, an English Man, and Founder of the Order of the Canons call'd Gilbertines in England, flourish'd in the end of this Century. He compos'd two Books of Constitutions for his Order, which are to be found in the Monasticon gham Anglicanum.

In the Library of St. Germain des Prez is to be seen, a Manuscript Collection of divers Sermons, which bear the Name of CHRISTIAN: Some are of Opinion, That this Author was Abbot of St. Peter Au Val, in the Diocese of Chartres: Others attribute this Piece to Christian Arch-bishop of Mentz, who died, A. D. 1183. and who wrote (as it is generally believ'd) an History of the Emperor Frederick's Expedition to the Holy Land: But others with greater probability ascribe it, to one of the two Christians, Monks of Clairvaux, and the Pupils of St. Bernard, who were made Abbots and Bishops in Ireland, and of whom mention is made in Chap. 8. of the second Book of St. Bernard's Life. Let the case be how it will, this Author has apparently taken many Notions out of the Works of that Saint.

GAUTIER, surnam'd DE CHATILLON, a Native of Lisle in Flanders, was the Author of the Alexandreis, or Poem on the Actions of Alexander, printed at Strasburg, A. D. 1531. and at Lyons in 1553. He also compos'd three Books in form of Dialogues against the Jews, which Father Oudin says he has seen in Manuscript in the Library of the Monastery of Premontre at Braine.

GARNIER, a Canon and Superior of the Abbey of St. Victor at Paris, compil'd in the end of the Century, a Treatise call'd The Gregorian, containing certain Allegorical Explanations tions on the Bible, taken out of the Writings of St. Gregory Pope. This Work was printed at Paris, A. D. 1608.

Thomas
Monk of Cisteaux.

THOMAS, a Monk of Cisteaux, is the Author of a Commentary on the Canticles divided into twelve Books, and dedicated to Pentius Bishop of Cormont; altho' some Periors have attributed it to other Authors of the same Name, and Paul de Ratis a Cordelier took the boldness to cause it to be printed at Rome, A. D. 1655. under the Name of John Duns firmam'd Scotus; but he was soon oppos'd by the Solicitor General of the Cistercian Order, who obtain'd a Decree of the Master of the Sacred Palace, by which it was declar'd, that that Commentary was unadvisedly printed under the Name of Scotus, and a Prohibition was made at the same time, to sell or publish it for the future under that Name, but only under that of Thomas of Cisteaux. Charles de Wifsch, who caus'd this Work to be printed in the Bibliotheca Premonstratensis attributed it to divers Thomas's, and afterwards John le Page the Collector of the Library of Premontrac, ascrib'd it to one Thomas Canon of that Order in the Monastery of Quefnoy; but the true Author of it is Thomas Monk of Cisteaux, as it appears from the ancient Manuscripts which are extant in the Libraries of the same Order. It likewise bears his Name in the first Editions set forth by Badius at Paris, A. D. 1521. and at Lyons in 1571. This Author flourish'd in the end of the Century.

Petrus
Com. flor
Dean of St. Peter at Troyes.

PETER, surnam'd COMESTOR, or the Elder, a Native of Troyes in Champagne, Priest and Dean of the Church of St. Peter in that City, acquir'd so great Reputation, that he was invited to Paris, and made Chancellor of the University. He retir'd near the end of his Life to the Monastery of St. Victor, and died there A. D. 1198. His principal Work, is a Scholastical History divided into sixteen Books, which comprehends an Abridgment of all manner of Sacred History, from the beginning of Genesis to the end of the Acts of the Apostles; but he intermixes therein divers Passages of profane History, and some fabulous Narrations. This Work was first printed at Rutlingen, A. D. 1473. and afterwards at Strasburg in 1483. as also at Basil in 1486. and at Lyons in 1543. The Sermons, which Buseau caus'd to be printed under the Name of Peter of Blois, belong to this Author, as well as some others which are extant in the Libraries.

Robert
bury.

ROBERT OF FLAMESBURY, a Regular Canon of St. Augustin, and Penitentiary in the Abbey of St. Victor, was in good repute for his Learning. He compos'd a large Penitential, which is kept in Manuscript in the Library of St. Victor, and in that of the College Des Cholets.

Bartholomew
Bishop of Oxford.
Odo of Chirton.

The English were always very accurate in their penitential Books, and two Authors were more especially famous for writing on that Subject in the end of the Twelfth Century. The first is BARTHOLOMEW Bishop of Oxford, a Manuscript Copy of whose Work is to be seen in the Library of St. Victor; and the other is ODO OF CHIRTON, whose Piece call'd The Summary of Repentance, is extant in divers Libraries of England, with several Homilies by the same Author.

Elie of Coxie
Abbot of Dunes.

ELIE OF COXIE, so call'd from the Name of a Village in the Territory of Furnes in Flanders, the place of his Nativity, was at first a Monk of Cisteaux and afterwards Abbot of Dunes. He has left us two large Discourses made by him in the Chapter of Cisteaux, which are contain'd in the Bibliotheca Ordinis Cisterciensis. He died A. D. 1203.

John a Carthusian
Monk of
des Portes.

JOHN, a Carthusian Frier of the Monastery of Des Portes, flourish'd in the end of this Century, and compos'd five Letters on pious Subjects, viz. the First about shunning of the World; The Second and Third of Prayer, the Fourth of the care that ought to be taken to observe the Inclinations of the Heart; and the Fifth of Perseverance in the State that one has once embrac'd, dedicated to Bernard his Nephew, a Carthusian Monk, who was tempted to quit that Order.

Stephen
de Chaul-met a Carthusian
Monk.
Zachary
Bishop of Chrysopo-
lis.

There is also a Letter written by another Monk of the same Carthusian Convent, nam'd STEPHEN DE CHAULMET, about continuing in the Order into which one has been admitted, which was dedicated to the Novices of the Monastery of St. Sulpicius of the Cistercian Order. These two Authors wrote in the end of the Century.

ZACHARY, a Regular Canon (as some say) of the Order of Premontrac in the Monastery of St. Martin at Laon, or according to others, Bishop of Chrysopolis, wrote a Commentary on Ammonius's Evangelical Concord, which was printed at Colen, A. D. 1535. and in the Nineteenth Tome of the Bibliotheca Patrum. We have no certain Account of the Life and Character of this Author, or of the time when he flourish'd.

C H A P. XIII.

Of the Writers of Ecclesiastical History of the Twelfth Century.

THE Twelfth Century has produc'd so great a Number of Historians, and Historical Works, as well Ecclesiastical as Prophane, that 'tis in a manner impossible to give a particular Account of every one of them; nevertheless we have endeavour'd to make a Catalogue of them, and at least to represent the Authors, and their Works in general: In order to do which more conveniently, and more methodically, we have distributed them under several Articles and Divisions.

The Writers of General History.

FLORENTIUS BRAVO, an English Monk of Winchester, wrote a Chronicle from the Creation of the World to the Year of our Lord 1118. taken in part from that of Marianus Scotus, printed at London, A. D. 1595. and at Frankfurt in 1601. as also a Genealogical Account of the Kings of England, which is likewise annex'd to the London Edition. He died A. D. 1119.

Florentius Bravo, Monk of Winchester.

ECKARD, Abbot of Oranien, in the Diocess of Wurtzburg, flourish'd A. D. 1130. and left a Chronicle to Posterity. Trithemius makes mention of a Work of this Author, call'd, The Lantern of Monks, there are also extant certain Letters and Sermons written by him.

Eckard, Abbot of Oranien.

HUGH, a Monk of Fleury, compos'd A. D. 1120. a Chronicle from the Creation of the World to the Year 846. which was printed at Munster in 1638. The same Author wrote two Books concerning the Royal Authority and the Sacerdotal Dignity, which were dedicated to Henry I. King of England, and publish'd by M. Baluzius, in the Fourth Tome of his Miscellaneous Works.

Hugh, Monk of Fleury.

ORDERICUS VITALIS, born in England at Attingesham on the River Severn, A. D. 1075. was sent at the Age of eleven Years to Normandy, and plac'd in the Abby of St. Evrou, where he assum'd the Habit of a Monk, and compleated his Studies. He likewise enter'd into Holy Orders, and spent his whole Life in that Monastery; leaving XIII Books of Ecclesiastical History, from the Nativity of Jesus Christ to the Year 1142. which were publish'd by M. du Chesne, in the Volume of the Historiographers of Normandy.

Ordericus Vitalis, Monk of St. Evrou.

ANSELM, Abbot of Gembours in Brabant, continu'd Sigebert's Chronicle from the Year 1112. to 1137. This Continuation, with two others, the first of which is extended to the Year 1149. and the second to 1225. was set forth by Albertus Miraus, and printed at Antwerp, A. D. 1608.

Anselm, Abbot of Gembours.

The Birth of OTHO, Bishop of Frisingen, is no less illustrious than the Reputation he acquir'd by writing his History: For he was the Son of Leopold Marquess of Austria, and of Agnes the Daughter of the Emperor Henry IV. That Princess was twice marry'd, viz. at first to Frederick Duke of Suecia or Schwaben, to whom he brought forth two Sons, namely, Conrad the Emperor, and Frederick Duke of Suevia: But by her second Marriage with Leopold, she had Leopold Duke of Bavaria, Henry Duke of Austria, Gertrude Dutcheß of Bohemia, Bertha Dutcheß of Poland, Ita Marchioness of Montferrat, Otho and Conrad. These two last being design'd by their Father for the Ecclesiastical Functions, Otho obtain'd the Government of a College, which his Father had founded at Neuburg, and where he order'd himself to be bury'd: But Otho soon resign'd his Office to Opoldus, and being incited with an ardent desire of becoming Master of the Liberal Sciences, went to Paris, where he compleated his Studies: Some Years after he turn'd Cistercian Monk, in the Abbey of Morimond, with Fifteen of his Companions. In 1138. the Emperor Conrad, his Brother, conferr'd on him the Bishoprick of Frisingen in Bavaria, and honour'd him with the Dignities of Chancellor and Secretary of State. He accompanied that Prince in his Expedition to the Holy Land. A. D. 1147. and at last in 1156. leaving his Bishoprick, retir'd to the Abbey of Morimond, where he died in the Month of September in the same Year.

Otho, Bishop of Frisingen.

This Prelate compos'd a Chronological History from the Creation of the World to his time, divided into Seven Books, and annex'd an Eighth concerning the Persecution to be rais'd by Antichrist, and the Resurrection of the Dead. He wrote a very fine Style, with respect to the Age in which he liv'd, and much more politely than the other Historians of those Times. He was well versed in Scholastical Divinity, as also in Aristotle's Philosophy; and was one of the first, who (as Radwic has observ'd) introduced that Science into Germany. Upon which Account, 'tis not to be admir'd that he has been very favourable to Gillebert de la Porrée, in the Dissertation prefix'd before his History: It was first published by John Cuspinian, and printed at Strasbourg, A. D. 1515. afterwards at Basil in 1569. and among the German Historiographers at Frankfurt in 1585. and 1670. Otho, in like manner, wrote two Books containing the History of the Actions of Frederick Barbarossa, which are subjoin'd at the end of his Chronicle. Moreover Walsangus Lactius says, that he saw an History of Austria compos'd by the same Otho, but there has been no talk of it since; neither has it as yet appear'd any where in Print.

Viterbo.

GODFREY OF VITERBO, so call'd from the Name of his Native Country, who was a Priest, Almoner, and Secretary of State to the Emperors Conrad III. Frederick I. and Henry VI. wrote an Universal Chronicle, dedicated to Pope Urban III. and call'd Pantheon, by reason of the great Variety of Occurrences contain'd therein: It ends at the Year 1186. and is inserted among the Works of the German Historians collected by Pistorius, and printed at Frankfurt in 1584. It is reported that this Writer spent Forty Years in travelling; that he made a prodigious Collection of all sorts of Observations during his Voyages; and that he understood the Hebrew, Chaldaick, Greek, and Latin Tongues. Lambecius makes mention of another Work by the same Author, which is to be seen in Manuscript in the Emperor's Library, bearing this Title, The Mirror of Kings, or Genealogies of all the Kings and Emperors from the universal Flood to the time of Henry VI.

Robert of Torigny, Abbot of Mount St.
Michael.

ROBERT OF TORIGNY, a Monk, afterwards Prior of Bec Abbey, and at last Abbot of St. Michael's Mount, compos'd a Supplement of Sigibert's Chronicle, and a Continuation to the Year 1184. as also a Treatise of the Monasteries and Abbies of Normandy; the History of that of St. Michael's Mount; a Commentary on St. Paul's Epistles taken from St. Augustin; and the History of the Reign of Henry II. King of England. Father Luke Dachery has caus'd to be printed at the end of Guibert's Works, the Supplement and Continuation of Sigibert's Chronicle, and the Treatise of the Abbies of Normandy, with a Letter written by the said Robert, and his Preface to the Commentary on St. Paul's Epistles.

St. Blaisius.

OTHO OF S. BLAISIIUS, continu'd the Chronicle of Otho of Frisinghen to the Year 1190.

John Brompton, Abbot of Jorval.

JOHN BROMPTON, an English Monk of the Cistercian Order, and Abbot of Jorval in the Diocese of York, is the reputed Author of a certain Chronicle from the Year 588. to 1198. but the learned Mr. Selden assures us, that it was not written by him; that he only caus'd it to be transcrib'd, and that he did not live in this Century.

Historians of England.

THE Kingdom of England has brought forth so many approved Authors, who have employ'd their Pens in writing the History of their Native Country, that they well deserve to be refer'd to a particular Article.

Henry,
Arch-deacon of Huntington.

HENRY OF HUNTINGTON, the Son of a marry'd Priest named Nicolas, and the Pupil of Albinus Andegavinus Canon of Lincoln, was made Canon of the same Church, and afterwards Arch-deacon of Huntington, by Alexander Bishop of Lincoln, whom he accompanied in his Journey to Rome. He wrote the History of the English Monarchy from its first Foundation till the Death of King Stephen, which happen'd in 1154. It is dedicated to the said Bishop Alexander, and divided into Eight or Ten Books, being contain'd among the Works of the English Writers in Sir Henry Savil's Collection, printed at London A. D. 1596. and at Frankfurt in 1601. Father Luke Dachery has likewise published in the Eighth Tome of his Spicilegium a small Tract of this Author, concerning the Contempt of the World, dedicated to Gauterius. He there shews how the Things of this sublunary World ought to be contemned, relating many Examples of Misfortunes that happen'd to the Great Personages of his Age, and the miserable Death of divers profligate Wretches: He declares, in the Preface to this Tract, that he had before made a Dedication to the same Person of a Collection of Epigrams, and of a Poem about Love. There are also in the Libraries of Oxford and Cambridge several other Manuscript Works of this Author, particularly a Letter concerning the British Kings, dedicated to Warinus; a Treatise of the Counties of Great Britain; another of the Image of the World; and a Third of the English Saints.

Gulielmus
gensis.

WILLIAM LITTLE, known by the Name of Gulielmus Neubrigensis, was born at Bridlington near York, A. D. 1136. and educated in the Convent of the Regular Canons of Neutbridge, where he embraced the Monastick Life: He compos'd a large History of England, divided into Five Books, from the Year 1066. to 1197. This History is written with much Fidelity, and in a smooth and intelligible Style. It was printed at Antwerp A. D. 1567. at Heidelberg in 1587. and lastly at Paris with John Picard's Notes in 1610. It is believ'd that he died A. D. 1208.

Walter,
Arch-deacon of Oxford.

WALTER, born in the Principality of Wales, Arch-deacon, and even (as some say) Bishop of Oxford, translated out of English into Latin the History of England, compos'd by Geffrey of Monmouth, and continued to his time.

John Pyke.

JOHN PYKE, wrote an History of the English, Saxon, and Danish Kings of England, and flourished with the former Historian under King Henry I.

Gervase,
Monk of Canterbury.

GERVASE, a Monk of Canterbury, compos'd several Treatises relating to the History of England, which are contain'd in Mr. Selden's Collection of the English Historiographers; particularly a Relation of the burning and repairing of the Cathedral Church of Canterbury; an Account of the Conteſts between the Monks of Canterbury, and Baldwin their Archbishop; a Chronicle from the Year 1122. to 1199. and the Lives of the Archbishops of Canterbury.

Geffrey
Arthur,
Bishop of St. Asaph.

GEFFREY ARTHUR, Arch-deacon of St. Asaph, was chosen Bishop of that Diocese A. D. 1151. He left his Bishoprick by reason of certain Commotions which happen'd in Wales, and retir'd to the Court of Henry II. King of England, who gave him the Abbey of Abbingdon in Commen-dam. Afterwards in a Council held at London, A. D. 1175. the Clergy of St. Asaph caus'd a Proposal to be made to Geffrey by the Archbishop of Canterbury, either to return to his Bishoprick, or to admit another Bishop to be substituted in his room: He refus'd to return, designing to keep his Abbey;

Abbey ; but both the Abbey and the Bishoprick were dispos'd of, and he was left destitute of any Ecclesiastical Preferment. He wrote, or rather translated out of English into Latin, an History of Great Britain from the beginning to his time ; which is full of Fables, dedicated to Robert Duke of Gloucester, and divided into Twelve Books. It was printed at Paris A. D. 1517. at Lyons by Porelier in 1537. and by Commelin in the same Year ; it is also inserted among the Works of the English Historians printed that Year at Heidelberg. It is reported that he, in like manner, translated out of English into Latin, the ancient Prophecies of Merlin, which were printed at Francfurt with Alanus's Observations, A. D. 1603.

The History of the Church of Durham was written by several Authors, the first of whom is TURGOT, a Monk of that Diocess, who compos'd one from its first Foundation to the Year 1096.

Turgot,
Monk of Durham.

SIMEON OF DURHAM, copied out Turgot's History almost word for word, from the Year 635. to 1096. and continued it to 1154. He likewise wrote an History of the Kings of England and Denmark, from the Year 731. to 1130. A Letter to Hugh Dean of York, about the Archbishops of that City ; and a Relation of the Siege of Durham. These Three last Pieces were published by Father Labbé, in the first Tome of his Library of Manuscripts. The Historians of the Church of Durham, by Turgot and Simeon, were printed at London, with the Works of the other English Historiographers, A. D. 1652.

Durham.

WILLIAM OF SOMERSET, a Monk of Malmesbury, is justly preferr'd before all the other English Historians. His History of England, divided into Five Books, contains the most remarkable Transactions in this Kingdom, since the arrival of the Saxons to the 28th Year of King Henry I. that is to say, from the Year of our Lord 449. to 1127. He afterwards added Two Books, continuing the History to A. D. 1143. and annexed to the whole Work Four Books, containing the History of the Bishops of England, from Augustin the Monk, who first planted Christianity in these Parts, to his time. These Works were printed at London, and published by Sir Henry Savil, A. D. 1596. and at Francfurt in 1601. Father Mabillon has likewise set forth, in the first Tome of his Benedictin Centuries, the Life of St. Adelm Bishop of Salisbury, compos'd by this Author, who died A. D. 1143.

William of Somerſet,
Monk of Malmesbury.

JOHN OF HEXAM, a Native of the County of Northumberland, Monk and Provost of the Monastery of Hagulſtadt, flourished about the Year 1160. He made a Continuation of Simeon of Durham's History of the Kings of England and Denmark, from A. D. 1130. to 1154. This Work is extant among those of the other English Historians, printed at London in 1652.

John of Hexam,
Provost of Hagulſtadt.

SYLVESTER GIRALD, born in Wales, flourished in the end of the Reign of King Henry II. to whom he dedicated a Natural History, a Topography of Ireland, and a History, in form of a Prediction, of the Conquest of Ireland by that Monarch, printed at Antwerp. These Works were published by Mr. Camden, and printed at Francfurt in 1602. He also wrote an Itinerary of Wales, upon a Visitation there made by him, with Baldwin Archbishop of Canterbury, to excite the People of that Country to undertake a Voyage to the Holy Land. This last Work is extant among the others, and was likewise printed at London in 1585. with a Description of the same Country of Wales. Besides these Pieces, he wrote the Lives of several Saints, and died Bishop of St. Davids in the beginning of the following Century. One of his Letters is contain'd in Archbishop Usher's Collection of the Letters of Ireland, and divers other Works of this Author are found among the Manuscripts of the publick Libraries of England.

St. Davids.

ROGER OF HOVEDEN, an Officer under King Henry II. and afterwards Regius Professor of Divinity in the University of Oxford, compos'd the Annals of England from the Year 731. where Venerable Bede ends to 1202. This Work is among those of the English Historians published by Sir Henry Savil, and printed at London A. D. 1595, as also at Francfurt in 1601.

Historiographers of the Crusade.

THE History of the Famous Crusade, instituted under Pope Urban II. and the Conquests which the Western People made in the Levant, from the Year 1095. to 1099. have afforded Matter to many contemporary Historians, the greater part of whom were Eye-witnesses of the Transactions related by them.

The First of these Historiographers is PETRUS THEUTBODUS, who saw the most part of the memorable Actions which he has committed to Writing ; and from whom those that wrote after him, took a considerable Part of their Relations.

Petrus
dus.

The Second is a NAMELESS Italian Author, who accompanied Boamond King of Sicily in the Expedition to the Holy Land. His Work is known by the Title of, The notable Exploits of the French, and other Christians of Jerusalem, and divided into Four Books.

A Name-
less Italian Author.

The Third is ROBERT, a Monk of St. Remy at Rheims, who assisted in the Council of Clermont in the Year 1095. and afterwards made a Voyage to the Holy Land. At his return, he wrote the History of the War of Jerusalem, divided into Eight or Nine very short Books : He excuses himself in the Preface, upon account of the roughness of his Style.

Monk of St. Remy at Rheims.

The Fourth is BAUDRY, Abbot of Bourgueil, who was afterwards ordain'd Bishop of Dol, A. D. 1114, and died January 27. 1131. His History is divided into Four Books ; but he was not an Eye-witness of what he relates, although he assisted in the Council of Clermont : Therefore he contents himself only to follow, and to supply the defects of an ancient nameless History, which was ill written, inserting such Accounts as he had receiv'd from others. This Author likewise wrote the Life of St. Hugh Archbishop of Rouen, and a Tract concerning the Monastery of Esfcamp, published in the Book called Neustria pia. To him also is attributed the Life of Robert d'Arbrisselles, which is in Surius, and the History of the Translation of St. Valentin's Head, which is extant in Bollandus's Collection in Febr. 14. Moreover it is observ'd that he is the Author of the Life of St. Samson, and that he promises certain Notes on the Pentateuch, in the Preface to his History. Lastly, 'tis reported that there is a small Manuscript Tract of the same Bishop Baudry, concerning the Visitation of the Sick, in the Library of Vienna in Austria. He was employ'd in writing his History near the end of his Life.

Raimond
d'Agiles.

The Fifth is RAIMOND D'AGILES, Canon of Puy, and Chaplain to the Count of Tboulonse, who was an Eye-witness. He wrote this History at the Request of Peter Ponce de Baladin, a particular Friend of the said Count, who was kill'd in the Siege of Arache, and dedicated it to the Bishop of Proyers.

Albert, or Alberic, Canon of Aix.

The Sixth is ALBERT, or ALBERIC, Canon of Aix in Provence, who compos'd his History from the Relations of others: It is extended to the Second Year of the Reign of Baldwin II. that is to say, to A. D. 1120.

Foucher,
Monk of Chartres.
Gautier,
the Chancellor.

The Seventh is FOUCHER, a Monk of Chartres, who accompanied Robert Duke of Normandy in the Expedition to the Holy Land, A. D. 1095. His History is carried on to the Year 1124. But Guibert of Nogent accuses him of having written fabulous Narrations.

Guibert,
Abbot of Nogent.
A Nameless Author.

GAUTIER, or GAUTERIUS, who assumes the Quality of Chancellor, is the Eighth: He published an History of the Advantages obtain'd by the Western Christians at Antioch, A. D. 1115, and of the Misfortunes that befel them in 1119. He was an Eye-witness of those Occurrences, and was taken Prisoner in the War; but his History is not very accurate.

Another
Nameless Writer.

The Ninth is GUIBERT, Abbot of Nogent, an Author of great Note, whose Works deserve to be specified in a separate Article.

William,
Archbishop of Tyre.

The Tenth is a NAMELESS Writer, who has only made an Abridgment of Foucher's History, to the Year 1106, where he ended.

The Eleventh is another Anonymous Author, who compos'd a Relation of the same Transactions, under the Title of the History of Jerusalem: It was divided into Two Parts, but the Second is only extant, which begins at the Year 1110. and ends in 1124. This Author has in like manner only follow'd Foucher.

The Twelfth, and most considerable of the Writers of this History, is WILLIAM Archbishop of Tyre, who has deduc'd it from the beginning of the Crusade to the Year 1183. in XXIII. Books. It is probable that this Author was a Native of Syria; however he pass'd very young into the Western Countries, and having compleated his Studies, return'd to the Levant, where he was ordain'd Arch-deacon of the Church of Tyre, A. D. 1167. Afterwards he was employ'd in the Negotiations that were transacted between the Kings of Jerusalem, and the Greek Emperors; and at last was advanc'd to the Dignity of Archbishop of Tyre, in the Month of May 1174. In 1179. he assisted in the Council of Lateran, the Acts of which were drawn up by him: He return'd from Italy by Constantinople, and after having resided some time at the Court of the Emperor Manuel Comnenus, arriv'd at Tyre twenty Months after his departure. The Patriarchal See of Jerusalem being then vacant, William of Tyre was nominated to fill it up; but a certain Clerk of Auvergne, named Heraclius, Archbishop of Casarea, was prefer'd before him; nevertheless William refus'd to acknowledge his Election, and cited him to Rome; where he went incontinently, and was kindly entertain'd by the Pope. In the mean while Heraclius, before he came thither, sent a Physician, who poison'd William of Tyre: But the later foretold before his Death, that the Christians should lose the City of Jerusalem, and the real Cross, under the Government of Heraclius, which happen'd a little while after.

dinal.

William of Tyre wrote his History by the Order of Amaury King of Jerusalem: He makes use of the Memoires of other Historians to the Reign of Baldwin III. and afterward relates such Matters as fell within the compass of his own knowledge, but the Twenty third Book is not finished. His Style is plain and natural, shewing much Sagacity of Judgment, Modesty, and Learning, with respect to the time when he liv'd. He likewise compos'd the History of the Levantine Princes, from the Year 614. to 1184. but this Work is not as yet come to our Hands.

The Thirteenth Historiographer is JAMES DE VITRY, who did not flourish till the following Century. This Author, after having been Curate of Argenteuil, became a Regular Canon in the Monastery of Oignies, in the Diocess of Namur. He preached up the Crusade against the Albigois, and afterwards against the Saracens, and took upon him the Cross for the Holy War in Palestine: He was ordain'd Archbishop of Prolemais, and at last, by way of Recompence for the Services he had done the See of Rome, was invited thither by Pope Honorius III. and created Cardinal: He was also sent into France in Quality of Legate, to preach up a new Crusade against the Albigois, and at his return to Rome died there A. D. 1244. after having order'd his Body to be convey'd to Oignies. His History is divided into Three Books; in the First of which, he gives an Account of the State of the Eastern Churches; in the Second, of that of the Western; and in the last, of the Occurrences which happen'd in the Levant in his time. There is also extant a Letter by the same Author about the taking of Damietta, which follows his History; and another Letter, containing a Relation of the Transactions before Damietta, which was written in 1219. to Pope Honorius III. and published by Father Dacher in the Eighth Tome of his Spicilegium.

The Fourteenth is a NAMELESS Author, who liv'd at that time, and wrote the History of A Nameless Author Jerusalem, from the Year 1177. to 1190.

To these Histories may be added divers Letters written by several Kings, Princes and Prelates, to Lewes the Young, King of France; as also a Relation of the taking of Damietta by Oliver of Colen, and some other Monuments gather'd together by Bongarsius, in his Collection of the Historiographers of the Crusade, call'd Gesta Dei per Francos, printed at Hanaw A. D. 1611. in which all the Works but now recited are contain'd. Some of them were printed separately, as the History by Robert Monk of St. Remy, of which there is an old Edition without the Printer's Name, or the Date of the Year; and another at Basil in 1533. There is only one part of Foucher's History in this Collection, but M. du Chesne has published it entire among the Works of the French Historiographers. Alberic's History was printed at Helmstadt in 1589. under the Title of the Chronicle of Jerusalem; that of William of Tyre was published by Poisnot, and printed at Basil in 1546. and afterward by Henry de Pantaleon, printed at the same Place in 1560. And lastly, James de Vitry's History was printed at Doray in 1597.

Writers of Chronicles, and particular Histories.

HUGH, a Monk of Verdun, and afterwards Abbot of Flavigny in the Dutchy of Burgundy, Hugh, Abbot of Flavigny. compos'd a Chronicle of Verdun divided into Two Parts, one of which begins at the Nativity of Jesus Christ, and ends in the Year 1002. and the other continues the History to 1102. This Work was published by Father Labbé, who gives a very great Character of it, in the first Tome of his new Library of Manuscripts; but the second Part is much more valuable than the first.

BAUDRY, Secretary to Gerard I. Lietbert and Gerard II. Bishops of Cambray, afterward Chancellor and Canon of Terouane, and at last Bishop of Noyon and Terouane, wrote the History of the Churches of Cambray and Arras, under the Title of the Chronicle of Cambray, published by Col. Noyon, and printed at Doray A. D. 1615. This Author was ordain'd Bishop in the Year of our Lord 1097. and died in 1112.

LEO OF MARSI, a Monk and Library-Keeper of Mount Cassin, was made Bishop of Sessa, Leo, Cardinal. and Cardinal Bishop of Ostia, by Pope Paschal II. A. D. 1101. He escap'd by flight from Rome, with Jahn Bishop of Frescati, when that Pope was apprehended by the Emperor Henry V. and run all about Italy to excite the People to take up Arms in his defence: He also sign'd a Bull of the same Pope Paschal II. in 1115. and died a little while after. He wrote a Chronicle of the Abbey of Mount Cassin divided into Three Books, which begins at the time of St. Benedict, and ends in that of the Abbot Desiderius, who was chosen Pope under the Name of Victor III. This Chronicle was printed at Venice A. D. 1513. at Paris with that of Aimoin in 1603. at Naples in 1616. and again at Paris in 1668. It is reported that there are some other Manuscript Tracts of this Author, particularly certain Sermons, and Lives of the Saints, &c. In the Vatican Library are to be seen several Letters of another LEO, in like manner Cardinal Deacon, who was promoted to that Dignity by Urban II. and who made a Register of the Letters written by the same Pope.

HARIULPHUS, a Monk of St. Riquier, compos'd a Chronicle of his Abbey, printed in the fourth Tome of Father Dachery's Spicilegium; the Life of St. Arnoul of Soissons, published by Surin; a Treatise of the Miracles of St. Riquier; and the Life of St. Maldegisilus, set forth by Father Mabillon in his Benedictin Centuries. This Author wrote in the beginning of the Twelfth Century.

RAINERIUS, a Monk of St. Lawrence at Liege, who flourished A. D. 1130. is the Author of a Treatise of the illustrious Personages of his Monastery, and of the Bishoprick of Liege, published by Chapeville, in his Collection of Monuments relating to the Church of Liege.

HERMAN, a Monk of St. Vincent at Laon, and afterwards Abbot of St. Martin at Tournay, flourished in the beginning of this Century. He wrote a large Narrative of the Restauration of the Church of St. Martin at Tournay, which contains the History of that Abbey, from the Reign of Philip I. King of France, to his time; that is to say, to the Year 1150. being inserted in the Twelfth Tome of Father Dachery's Spicilegium. He likewise compil'd Three Books of the Miracles of St. Mary of Laon, printed with the Works of Guibert of Nogent, and another Manuscript Treatise about the Incarnation of Jesus Christ, dedicated to Stephen Archbishop of Vienna.

FALCO OF BENEVENTUM, who was created Magistrate of that City by Pope Innocent II. left a Chronicle or History from the Year 1102. to 1140. in which he gives a particular Account of Matters relating to his Native Country. This Work was published by Father Caracioli of the Theatine Order, and printed at Naples A. D. 1626.

UDASCALCHUS, a Monk, compos'd a Relation of the Controversies between Herman Bishop of Augsberg, and Egino Abbot of St. Ulric, with a Poem concerning the Voyage and Death of the said Egino, published by Canisius in the Second Tome of his Collection. This Author wrote in the time of Pope Paschal II. and of Arnulphus Archbishop of Mentz, some of whose Letters are inserted by him in his Relation.

ALEXANDER, an Abbot in Sicily, compil'd Four Books of the Life and Reign of Roger King of Sicily, which were printed at Saragossa, A. D. 1578. and in the Book called Hispania illustrata. This Author wrote after the Death of King Roger, which happen'd in 1154.

JOHN,

John, Monk of Mar-
moutier.

JOHN, a Monk of Marmoutier, wrote the History of the Actions of Geffrey Plantagenet, Count of Angers and Duke of Normandy, published by M. du Bouchel, and printed at Paris A. D. 1610. as also in M. du Chesne's Collection of the Historians of Normandy.

Geffrey, or
Vinesauf.

GEFFREY, or WALTER DE VINESAUF, of Norman Extraction, but born in England, after having run through a Course of Learning in his Native Country, travell'd beyond Sea, and acquir'd a great deal of Reputation. He compos'd a Work in Hexameter Verse, dedicated to Pope Innocent III. under the Title of The new Poesy, or the Art of Speaking; and another Treatise about the planting and improving of Trees. Both these Works are only in Manuscript; but in the Second Tome of the English Historians, printed at Oxford in 1687. is contain'd his History, or the Itinerary of King Richard I. to the Holy Land, which was attributed to other Authors; in the same Place are also found certain Copies of Verses on King Richard.

Odo, Abbot of St. Cornelius at
peigne.

ODO OF DEUIL, Abbot of St. Cornelius at Compeigne, and afterward Successor to Suger in the Abbey of St. Denis, wrote a Relation of the Voyage of Lewes VII. King of France to the Levant, published by Father Chifflet in his Treatise of the Nobility of St. Bernard, printed at Paris A. D. 1660. This Author died in 1168.

Laurence,
a Monk of Liege.

LAURENCE, a Monk of Liege, being sent to Verdun resided in the Monastery of St. Vito, and was employ'd in writing a Chronicle of the Bishops of that Diocese to the Year 1148. printed in the Twelfth Tome of the Spicilegium: It is reported that he liv'd till A. D. 1179.

Suger, Abbot of St. Denis.

SUGER, Abbot of St. Denis, famous as well for his Learning and Zeal in maintaining the Rights of the Church, as on account of the Nobleness of his Birth, and the considerable Employments he obtain'd in the State, wrote the Life of Lewes the Gros King of France; divers Letters relating to the publick Affairs of the Kingdom, during his Administration of the Government; a Treatise of his Transactions in the Abbey of St. Denis; a Narrative of the Consecration of that Church; with certain Constitutions, and his last Will and Testament. These Monuments are extant in the Fourth Tome of the Historians by du Chesne; except the Account of the Consecration of the Church, which is not there entire, and to which Father Mabillon added a Supplement, in the First Tome of his Analecta. Suger was chosen Abbot of St. Denis A. D. 1122. during his residence at Rome, and consecrated in 1123. He died in 1153.

Aldebert, or Albert, Abbot of Hildesheim.

ALDEBERT, or ALBERT, Abbot of Hildesheim, flourished in the Year 1160. He wrote a Relation of the Restauration of his Monastery to the Benedictins under Pope Eugenius III. which was published by Gretser, and printed at Ingolstadt A. D. 1617.

Teulphus,
Monk of Maurigny.
Hugh, of Poitiers,
Monk of Vezelay.
Richard,
Prior of Hagulstadt.

TEULPHUS, a Monk of Maurigny, compos'd in the Year 1150. a Chronicle of his Monastery, from A. D. 1008. to 1147. which is to be found in the Three Tomes of the Historians by M. du Chesne.

HUGH OF POITIERS, a Benedictin Monk, Secretary to the Abbey of Vezelay, began in the Year 1156. by Order of Ponce Abbot of Vezelay, the History of that Monastery, and completed it in 1167. under William Abbot of the same Abbey. It is divided into Four Books, and was published by Father Dachery in the Third Tome of his Spicilegium.

RICHARD, an English Man of the County of Northumberland, Monk and Prior of the Monastery of Hagulstadt, flourished An. Dom. 1180. and died in 1190. His Works were published among those of the English Historians, printed at London in 1652. They are, an History of the Church and Bishops of Hagulstadt; that of the Actions of King Stephen; and that of the War manag'd by Standardius from A. D. 1135. to 1139.

Thierry, or Theodoric, a Monk.
A Name-
thor.

THIERRY, or THEODERIC, a Monk, wrote about the Year 1180. a compendious History of Ecclesiastical Affairs, and of the Kings of Norway, published with another Piece of a NAMELESS Author, concerning the Expedition which the Danes undertook to the Holy Land, A. D. 1185. which was set forth by Gasper Kirkman, from the Memoires of John Kirkman of Lubeck his Uncle, and printed at Amsterdam in 1684.

Geffrey,
Prior of Vigeois.

GEFFREY, a French Monk of the Monastery of St. Martial at Limoges, and afterward Prior of Vigeois in the same Diocese, who was ordain'd Priest in 1167. by Gerauld Bishop of Caen, wrote a Chronicle or History of France from the Year 996. to 1184. which was published by Father Labbé in the Second Tome of his new Library of Manuscripts.

Gonthier,
Monk of St. Amand.

GONTHIER, or GONTHERIUS, a Monk of the Abbey of St. Amand, had the Reputation of being a good Poet, and compos'd a Poem of the Exploits of the Emperor Frederick Barberossa in Lombardy and Liguria, which on that Account was called The Ligurine, and was printed at Straßburg A. D. 1531. as also at Basil in 1569. at Frankfurt in 1584. and among the German Historians. He likewise wrote a Treatise of Prayer, Fasting and Alms-giving, printed at Basil in 1504. and 1507. The Lives of St. Cyricius, and St. Julia in Verse, are also attributed to the same Author.

Saxo
Grammaticus, Provost of Roschild.

SAXO, fir-nam'd the Grammarian, by reason of the purity of his Style, was a Dane by Nation, of the Isle of Sceland. He was Provost of the Church of Roschild, and Chaplain to Abisalon Archbishop of Lunden, who sent him to Paris A. D. 1177. to conduct the Monks of St. Genevieve into Denmark. He wrote the History of his native Country to the Year 1186. Erasmus extols the vivacity of his Conceptions, the nobleness of his Expressions, the fluency of his Rhetorick, and the admirable variety of his Figures, and wonders much, by what means a Dane could arrive at such a height of Eloquence in that Age. He chiefly affected to imitate Valerius Maximus. His History was published by Christiann Petri, Canon of Lunden, and printed at Paris A. D. 1514. John Bebelius caus'd it to be printed at Basil in 1534. as also did Philip Leonicier, and John Eichard at Frankfurt in 1576. Lastly, Johannes Stephanus set forth a more large and correct correct Edition of it, with Prolegomena and Annotations, at Sora in 1644. This Author died in 1204.

RALPH DE DICETO, an English Man by Nation, and Dean of St. Paul's at London, a Person well known on account of his Learning and Travels into Foreign Countries, wrote a compendious Chronicle from the Creation of the World to the Year 1198. The first Part of it ending at the time of Pope Gregory the Great was never published, because it only contain'd trivial Matters. He also compos'd certain Historical Tracts call'd Portraits, from A. D. 1148. to 1200. These Works are among those of the English Historians printed at London in 1652.

Writers of Relations of the Lives and Miracles of Saints.

STEPHEN, Abbot of St. James at Liege, wrote in the beginning of the Century the Life of St. Modaldus Archbishop of Trier, divided into Three Books, and the History of the Translation of that Saint, published by Surius and the Bollandists.

HUGH, a Monk of St. Saviour at Lodeve, compos'd a Relation of the Conversion of Ponce de Laraze, Founder of that Monastery, which was set forth by M. Baluzius in the Third Tome of his Miscellaneous Works.

HERMAN, a Jew of Colen, being converted by the Sermons of Egbert Bishop of Munster, and by the Conferences he had with Abbot Rupert, retir'd to a Monastery of Regular Canons in his native Country. He wrote a small Tract about his Conversion, published by Carpzovius in the last Edition of Raimond, printed at Lipsick in 1687.

THOMAS, a Monk of Ely in England, wrote an Account of the Life and Translation of St. Etheldrith the first Abbess of Ely, who died A. C. 679. This Piece was published by Father Mabillon in the Second Benedictin Century.

Thomas,
Monk of Ely.

CHAP. IV.

An Account of the Lives and Writings of the Ecclesiastical Authors of the Levant in the Twelfth Century.

THE Country of Greece has produc'd in this Century a great number of Writers of good Note, who attain'd to much skill as well in Divinity, as in the Canon and Civil Law. Of the chief of these we shall give a particular Account in this Chapter.

EUTHYMIUS ZYGABENUS, a Greek Monk of the Order of St. Basil, flourished in the beginning of this Century, under the Emperor Alexis Comnenus, by whom he was highly esteem'd. He apply'd himself very much to the reading of the Writings of the Ancient Greek Fathers, and compos'd the following Works, Viz.

Euthymius
Zygabenus, a Greek
Monk.

A Collection of Passages taken out of the Fathers on divers Points of Religion against the Errors of the Hereticks, which is divided into Two Parts, and call'd Panoplia Dogmatica, or the Defence of the Orthodox Faith against all Heresies. The Greek Text of this Work never as yet came to our hands, only a Latin Version made by Zinus, printed at Lyons A. D. 1536. at Paris in 1556. at Venice in 1575. and in the Bibliotheca Patrum. A large Commentary on the 150 Psalms, and the 10 Canticles, taken out of the Works of the Fathers, which was printed in Greek at Verona A. D. 1530. and in Latin of Saulius's Translation at Paris in 1543. and 1547. as also at Venice in 1568. M. le Moine has published in the First Tome of his Collection of Monuments the Preface to this Commentary, in which the Author treats of several Questions relating to the Psalms. A Commentary on the four Gospels, printed in Greek at Verona in 1530. and in Latin of Hentenius's Version at Louvain in 1544. as also at Paris in 1560. Simlerus assures us, that there is a Manuscript Copy in Sambucus's Library, of a Commentary by this Author on the Catholick Epistles; and some Ecclesiastical Writers make mention of his Commentary on St. Paul's Epistles. The Commentaries of Euthymius Zygabenus are Literal, Moral, and Allegorical; in the Literal, he makes it his Business to explain the proper signification of the Terms; his Moral Discourses are solid, and his Allegories natural, and fitly adapted to the Matter in debate.

PHILIP surnam'd THE SOLITARY, a Greek Monk, compos'd in the Year 1105. a Work Philip the call'd Diapiron, or The Rule of Christian Life, dedicated to Callinicus, and divided into Four Books, Solitary, a a Version of which made by Jacobus Pontanus was printed at Ingolstadt A. D. 1604. and afterwards Greek inserted in the Bibliotheca Patrum. It is written by way of Dialogue between the Soul and the Monk, Body, the Author introducing the former as a Tutress or Guardian, and the other as the Pupil: The Soul gives many moral Instructions to the Body, who acknowledges and approves the Truths laid down, owns her natural Infirmities, and even sometimes gives advice to the Soul. The Author in this Discourse produces great variety of fine Passages out of the Greek Fathers, and takes an Occasion to discuss some Doctrinal Points, amongst others the necessity of Confession is more particularly inculcated. He also proves that the Souls of the Righteous, after their Death, are translated to Heaven, and there enjoy everlasting Happiness; and explains several Questions about the Resurrection; but he chiefly treats of Points relating to Morality, and the State of Human Nature.

PETRUS CROSOLANUS, or CHRYSOLANUS, being translated from a certain Bishoprick to the Metropolitan See of Milan, in the beginning of this Century, was sent in Quality of Legate by Pope Paschal II. to the Court of Alexis Comnenus Emperor of Constantinople; where he disputed with much earnestness, both by word of Mouth and Writing, against the Opinion of the Greeks, concerning the Procession of the Holy Ghost. Upon his return, the Archbishoprick of Milan was contested with him by Jordanes, and he was condemn'd in a Council held at Lateran in 1116. to leave it, and to return to his Bishoprick. The Discourse is still extant which he made to Alexis Comnenus about the Procession of the Holy Ghost: It is in Latin in Baronius, under the Year 1119. and in Greek and Latin in the First Tome of Allatius's Book, call'd Græcia Orthodoxa.

Petrus Chrysolanus.

EUSTRATIUS, Archbishop of Nice, was one of those Persons who reply'd to Chrysolanus: He was a Man of profound Learning and Skill, as well in Ecclesiastical as Civil Affairs. His Treatise against Chrysolanus is extant in Manuscript in several Libraries, and Leo Allatius makes mention of Five other Treatises of this Author; but we have none printed, except certain Greek Commentaries on Aristotle's Analyticks published at Venice A. D. 1534. as also his Commentaries on the Ethicks of the same Philosopher, printed in Greek at Venice in 1536. and in Latin at Paris in 1543.

Eustratius, Archbishop of Nice.

At the same time NICETAS SEIDUS wrote a Treatise against the Latins, the Design of which was to prove, that Antiquity is not always most Venerable, and therefore that greater Honour is not due upon that account to Old Rome than to the New. Leo Allatius produces a great number of Fragments taken out of this Treatise, in his Books of the Concord between the Greek and Latin Churches. L. 1. c. 14. §. 1, 2. L. 2. c. 1. §. 2. L. 3. c. 12. §. 4.

ISAAC, an Armenian Bishop, being separated from the Communion of his Country-men, and turn'd out of their Society, compos'd against them in the Year 1130. divers Works, in which he confutes their Errors. In the first and chief of these Writings, he accuses them of being addicted to the Heresy of the Aphthartodocites, that is to say, of believing that the Body of Jesus Christ was not like ours, but impassible, immortal, uncreated, and naturally invisible; that by the Incarnation it was chang'd into the Divine Nature, which absorb'd it, as a drop of Honey thrown into the Sea, is so far intermixed with the Water that it entirely disappears. He adds, that by reason of this Error, they did not attribute to the Holy Mysteries of the Eucharist the Name of the Body and Blood of Jesus Christ, but that of his Divinity or Godhead. Isaac confutes his Adversaries by several Passages of Holy Scripture, and the Testimonies of St. Athanasius, and St. Cyril of Alexandria. Afterwards he reproves them upon account of divers Matters which relate only to Discipline, although he makes as many Errors of them as Heresies. Viz.

1. That they neglected to celebrate the Festival of the Annunciation in any Month of the Year, under pretence that the Virgin Mary did not conceive in March: Isaac maintains that she conceiv'd on the 25. day of that Month, and endeavours to prove it by the Testimonies of Eusebius, St. Athanasius, and St. Chrysostom; but they are taken out of supposititious Pieces.

Nicetas Seidus.

Isaac, an Armenian Bishop.

2. That they do not celebrate the Nativity of Jesus Christ with due Solemnity, contenting themselves only to commemorate in a mournful manner, without any Ceremony, the Annunciation of our Saviour's Nativity and Baptism in one Day.

3. That they do not mingle Water with the Wine in the Chalice in order to the Consecration.

4. That in the Administration of the Sacrament of the Lord's Supper, they make use of unleavened Bread. Isaac confutes this Custom, and affirms, that Jesus Christ us'd leaven'd Bread in the Institution of the Eucharist; and that although it were granted, that he made use of unleaven'd, yet that would not infer a necessity of imitating him, in regard that the Church observes many Things in the Celebration of the Holy Mysteries, which are not conformable to what our Saviour did at that time. He produces several Examples in the Eighth Chapter to that purpose.

5. That they were wont to make an Oblation of Oxen, Sheep and Lambs, at the Altar.

6. That they have not a due Veneration for the Sign of the Cross.

7. That they sometimes join Three Crosses together, and impose on them the Name of the Trinity.

8. That they usually sing the Trisagion, with Petrus Fullo's Addition; that is to say, in adding to these Words, Holy God, Almighty God, Immortal God, these, who wast crucify'd for us.

9. That they do not receive Ordination from the Archbishop of Caesarea.

10. That they do observe a very rigorous Fast call'd Artoburia, in the Week preceeding Tyrophagia; that is to say, the Week before the beginning of Lent, during which the Greeks abstain from eating Flesh, and live on White-meats. Isaac condemns this Custom as superstitious, and the original of that Fast, refusing the Reasons alledg'd in vindication of it. Afterwards he makes an Exhortation to the Armenians to renounce their Errors, and absurd Customs contrary to the Faith and Discipline of the Church established in the Councils, and by the Bishops of Rome.

Bishop Isaac's Second Treatise against the Armenians is not so large as the former: He there reckons up 29 Articles of Heretical or Erroneous Opinions to be imputed to them, the most part of which may be referr'd to those we have but now observ'd; adding,

* Lights.

11. That they do not solemnize the Festival of * Lumieres, on the Sixth day of January, in commemoration of the Baptism of Jesus Christ.

12. That they usually make their Consecrated Oils of Rape-seed, and not of Olives, and that they do not administer Unction at the Sacrament of Baptism.

13. That they permit none but those Persons who Officiate to say the Lord's Prayer.

14. That they do not blow upon baptized Persons.

15. That they do not shew a due Respect to the Images.

16. That during the time of Lent they do not resort to the Church, nor adore the Crosses.

17. That they were wont to eat Cheese on Saturdays, and Sundays in Lent.

18. That they do not rightly honour the Saints.

19. That they do not observe the Week of Tyrophagia.

20. That they appear before the Altar with their ordinary Habits, and that they keep their Hats on during the Celebration of Divine Service.

21. That they do not administer the Communion on Holy Thursday.

22. That they imitate the Jews in eating a Paschal Lamb on Easter-day, with the Blood of which they sprinkle their Door-Posts, and keep the rest to serve for Benedictions, causing a Victim painted red to be brought to the Church-door, where they sacrifice it with a great deal of Ceremony.

About that time the Armenians sent Legates to Rome to Pope Eugenius III. to enter into a Union with the Latin Church, whose Custom they follow'd in the use of unleaven'd Bread, and in some other Matters. This Embassy is referr'd to by Orto of Frisinghen.

Michael Glycas, a Sicilian.

MICHAEL GLYCAS, a Sicilian, compos'd in the beginning of this Century his Annals, divided into Four Parts; which is not only an Historical Work, but also has some relation to Divinity, and natural Philosophy. In the First Part he treats of the Creation of the World: The Second contains an History from the Creation of the World to the Nativity of Jesus Christ: The Third continues the History from our Saviour to Constantine the Great: And in the Fourth it is brought down to the Death of Alexis Comnenus. These Annals were printed in Latin, of Lewenclavius's Version at Basil A. D. 1572. But they were published in Greek and Latin by Father Labbe, and printed at Paris in 1660. Jacobus Pontanus likewise set forth two Discourses of the same Author, with the Dioptron of Philip the Solitary, printed at Ingolstadt in 1604. Leo Allatius produces several Fragments of divers Letters written by Michael Glycas, and cites a Treatise which he compos'd about the Procession of the Holy Ghost, dedicated to Maximus Semenota; another Piece concerning the Question, Whether Jesus Christ made use of unleaven'd Bread at his last Supper? And a Tract of the State of Souls separated from the Body. Lastly, Possevainus observes, that there are certain Treatises of this Author on the Holy Scripture, in the Emperor's Library at Vienna.

Nicetas of Constanti-nople.

At the same time NICETAS, a Philosopher or Monk of Constantinople, wrote an Apologetical Treatise for the Council of Chalcedon against a certain Prince of Armenia, which was published by Allatius in the First Tome of his Græcia Orthodoxa.

CONSTANTIN MANASSES flourished in Greece A. D. 1150. and wrote an Epitome of Constantin History, dedicated to Irene the Sister of the Emperor Manuel Comnenus, from the Creation of the World to the Reign of Alexis Comnenus, that is to say, to the Year 1081. The Latin Version of this Chronicle by Lowenclavius was printed at Basil in 1573. The Greek Text was published separately by Meursius at Amsterdam in 1616. but it was printed in Greek and Latin with the Notes of Lowenclavius, Meursius, Allatius, and Fabrotus in Folio at Paris A. D. 1655.

CONSTANTINUS HARMENOPULUS, a Judge of Thessalinaca, flourished A. D. 1150. at the time when the Heresy of the Bogomiles began to appear: He was an able Lawyer, and compil'd a Dictionary of the Civil Law, which was printed in Greek at Paris in 1540. in Latin at Lyons in 1556. and in Greek and Latin, with the Notes of Joan. Mercerus, and Dionysius Gothofredus at Geneva in 1587. as also a Collection of Canons divided into Six Titles or Articles, and published in Greek and Latin by Lowenclavius in the First Tome of his Jus Græco-Romanum, or Collection of Greek and Roman Laws. To these Works may be added his Treatise of the Sects of Hereticks, with a Confession of Faith, which is inserted in the first Tome of Fronto Ducaeus's Supplement to the Bibliotheca Patrum.

JOHN, a Monk of the Island of Ochia, and Patriarch of the Greek Church of Antioch, A. D. 1150. John, Patriarch of Antioch, is the Author of a small Treatise against the Custom that was then introduced of conferring Monasteries on Noble men or Laicks. This Tract is mention'd by Balsamon and Blasteres, and was published by Cotelerius in the First Tome of his Monuments of the Greek Church. Perhaps it may not be improper here to shew after what manner he treats of the Original and Progress of the Monastick Life.

"Our Lord Jesus Christ (says he) having descended from Heaven to Earth for the Salvation of Mankind, having also actually redeemed us by his Death, and established his Religion throughout the whole World; the Devil us'd his utmost Efforts to cause Men to return to their former exorbitant Courses: To which purpose he at first excited the Emperors and Potentates to raise cruel Persecutions against the Christians. Afterwards, when the Christian Religion was embraced by Kings and Princes, he caus'd Heresies to succeed Superstitions; but when these means in like manner prov'd ineffectual, he made use of another Method, which was to induce the Christians to defer the Administration of Baptism: But our Ancestors the Successors of the Apostles, perceiving the damage such Procrastinations brought to the Catholick Church, and that many Persons died without Baptism, ordain'd that all Infants should be Baptiz'd and Educated in the Christian Religion by their Parents, or by their God-fathers and God-mothers. The Devil being thus defeated, had recourse to another Artifice; which was to corrupt the Manners of baptized Persons, well knowing that Faith without good Works is unprofitable to Salvation: Whereupon the Church enjoy'd Pennance as an Antidote against these Disorders; but the Devil often caus'd the Penitents to fall again into the same vicious Courses, before the time of their Pennance was expir'd. This difficulty of living Vertuously and Soberly in the World, caus'd many Persons to take a Resolution to retire to Solitary Places, there to lead an Ascetic Life; in so much that their Reputation drew many People thither, who imitated their manner of Living; and their Number being thus encreased, they form'd Regular Societies, and erected Monasteries.

"This Institution began in Egypt, and from thence was spread abroad throughout the whole World, as St. Athanasius and Theodorus Studita have observ'd. The Bishops, to render the Monastick Life more recommendable, thought fit to confer on the Monks a kind of Consecration, or Benediction, which is as it were a renewing of the Baptismal Vows. There were among the Monks a great number of Saints who wrote excellent Books relating to the Monastick Discipline, and by that means brought it to perfection. In the mean while the Devil not being able to endure their Proceedings, at first attacked them by Leo the Image-breaker, who endeavour'd to extirpate their Order; but this Emperor was destroy'd, and after his Reign the Monks obtain'd so great Reputation, that they were permitted to receive Confessions, to impose Pennances, and to give Absolution. How many Attempts has the Devil made to ruin an Order so well established? He has caus'd Monasteries and Hospitals to be made over by Princes and Patriarchs to Lay-men: Indeed at first they were not consign'd to such Persons, to the end that they might make any Advantage of them, but that they might be re-established and improv'd. Afterwards Coverousness being cloked with this specious Shew, the Emperors and Patriarchs began to grant Monasteries and Hospitals to Laicks, to gain profit by them. The Patriarch Sisinnius oppos'd this Abuse, which prevail'd from time to time, and which is at present so great, that almost all the Monasteries of Monks and Nuns are in the possession of Lay-men, nay even of those that are married.

The Patriarch of Antioch condemns the said Custom in the remaining Part of this Treatise, alledging the following Reasons: viz. 1. That the very Title of Donation imports a kind of Blasphemy; in regard that a Monastery, or Church, which bears the Name of our Saviour, of the Virgin Mary, or of the Saints, is given to a meer Man. 2. That the Donor has no Propriety in such Possessions. 3. That the Monasteries are Places of Retreat for Persons who are desirous to serve God, where his Praises are sung, and the Revenues of which are appointed for the maintenance of the Saints, and of the Poor. 4. That the Government of the Church is subverted by such irregular Proceedings, when Secular Persons are substituted in the room of Monks. 5. That Monasteries, which are thus made over to Lay-men, are soon ruin'd or demolished; and that under Pretence of enfranchising them under the protection of some Lord, they are made subject to the Jurisdiction of such as are ready to pillage and ruin them; treating the Priors and Monks as Slaves, and allowing them only a very small Portion of the Revenues, and that too grudgingly, and as it were out of pure Charity. Besides that these Patrons cannot be perswaded to keep their Monasteries in repair, nor to give Alms, neither do they take care that Divine Service be celebrated therein, nor that a regular Course of Discipline be duly observ'd: But, on the contrary, they apply the Revenues altogether to prophane Uses. That without having any regard to the Monastick Rules and Constitutions, which import, that whoever presents himself in order to be admitted to the Profession, shall undergo a Probation of Three Years; they usually nominate Monks at their Pleasure, and enjoin the Priors to admit them by virtue of their Mandamus. Lastly, that the Monks who are placed there, after so irregular a manner, generally make no scruple to live as dissolutely, eating Flesh inordinately, committing Outrages upon the Laicks, setting forth publick Shews, driving Trades, haunting Ale-houses or Taverns, and making their Monasteries common Receptacles for all sorts of Secular Persons.

6. That greater Disorders were occasion'd on that account in the Convents of Nuns; the Ladies to whom they are consign'd often usurping their Revenues: That they take up their abode, and cause Houses to be built within the Bounds of the Monasteries; and that they introduce Secular Persons, and entirely subvert the Monastick Discipline. From all these Arguments he concludes, that it is a very high Misdemeanour, and a kind of Impiety equal to Heresy, to put Monasteries into the hands of Laicks; and that 'tis a mortal Sin for such Persons to take possession of them; and that they who die in that State, without doing Penance for their Offence, (which frequently happens) incur Damnation. The Name of Charistochairi was then usually impos'd among the Greeks on those Lay-men, who had any Abbeyes consign'd to them. Theodorus Balsanon, in his Remarks on the 13th. Canon of the Seventh Synod, and Matthæus Blastares, are of a different Opinion from this Author, and approve the Donations of Monasteries which are made by Bishops, provided they be done on good Grounds.

Germanus, Patriarch of Constantinople.

There are extant Two Homilies of GERMANUS Patriarch of Constantinople; viz. one published by Gresser, on the reformation of Image-worship, under the Empress Irene, an annual Commemoration of which was made on the First Sunday in Lent, and the other by Father Combesis, on the Burial of the Body of Jesus Christ.

Arsenius.
Andronicus Camaterus.

Arsenius, a Monk of Mount Athos, compos'd in the Year 1150. a compendious Collection of Canons, which is inserted in M. Justel's Library of the Ancient Canon Law.

ANDRONICUS CAMATERUS, Governour of the City of Constantinople, and the Kinsman of the Emperor Manuel Comnenus, wrote at the same time a Treatise against the Latins, in form of a Dialogue, between the Emperor Manuel and certain Cardinals of Rome, concerning the Procession of the Holy Ghost. This Book was afterwards refuted by Veccus. Andronicus is also the Author of another Tract, written by way of Conference between the same Emperor, and Peter Patriarch of the Armenians; and of a Treatise of the Two Natures in Jesus Christ. These Works are not as yet printed, but 'tis reported that they are in the Library of Bavaria.

George.
Archbishop of Corfu.

GEORGE, Archbishop of Corfu, was sent into Italy by the Emperor Manuel Comnenus, to assist in a Council held at Rome; but he did not pass beyond Brundisium, where he fell sick. However being recall'd by the Emperor, he was present in a Patriarchal Council conven'd at Constantinople. He wrote a Treatise of Purgatory, and another against the Latins, in vindication of the use of heaven'd Bread in the Eucharist. Allatius makes mention of both these Works, which are in Manuscript in the Library of Barberino. Baronius has also published in Latin a Menodia, compos'd by this Archbishop in honour of the Abbot Nectarius, with several Letters in his Annals.

Antonius
Melissus.

ANTONIUS, fir-nam'd MELISSUS, by reason of his singular Eloquence, a Greek Monk, apparently liv'd in this Century: He compil'd a Collection of Common Places, or Maxims, taken out of the Writings of the Greek Fathers, on the Virtues and Vices, which are divided into Two Books, and were printed in Greek and Latin at Basil A.D. 1546. as also at Genova in 1609. and in Latin at Paris in 1575. and 1589. They are likewise inserted in Latin in the Bibliotheca Patrum.

Basil of Acris, Archbishop of Thessalo-
nica.

BASIL OF ACRIS, Archbishop of Thessalonica, being importun'd by Arian IV. to come to an Accommodation with the Church of Rome, wrote a Letter to that Pope, to shew that the Greek Church is not Schismatical, and that the Roman is not superiour to it. Baronius published this Letter with that of Adrian in Anno 1155. of his Annals. It is also extant, but somewhat different, in Greek and Latin, in the Collection of the Greek and Roman Law, with an Answer by the same Archbishop to certain Questions about Marriage.

Lucas Chrysobergius, Patriarch of
nople.

LUCAS, fir-nam'd CHRYSOBERGIUS, promoted to the Patriarchal See of Constantinople A.D. 1148. or 1155. held a Council in that City in 1166. and died the Year following. In the Collection of the Greek and Roman Laws are contain'd Thirteen Statutes by this Patriarch, relating to Ecclesiastical Matters; among others, one to prohibit Marriages between Relations to the Seventh Degree of Consanguinity; another against Clerks who intermeddle with Secular Affairs; as also to forbid the performing of rash Oaths, with a Discourse about the Baptism of Captive Children.

Michael of
nica.

MICHAEL OF THESSALONICA, Master of the Rhetoricians, and principal Defender of the Church of Constantinople, being condemn'd in the Year 1160. for maintaining the Heresy of the Begamiles, retracted his Errors, and made a Confession of Faith, refer'd to by Allatius in the Second Tome of his Concordia Ecclesie Orientalis & Occidentalis, L. 2. c. 12.

ALEXIS ARISTENES, Oecumenus, or Steward of the Church of Constantinople, assisted in a Council held in that City A.D. 1166. and there cited the 37th. Canon of the Council in Trullo, against Nicephorus Patriarch of Jerusalem. He wrote Annotations on a Collection of Canons printed in Dr. Beveridge's Pandects.

SIMEON LOGOTHETA, who liv'd at the same time, in like manner compos'd Notes on the same Collection of Canons, but they are lost. He is also reputed to be the Author of a Piece concerning the Creation of the World, a Manuscript Copy of which M. du Cange had in his possession.

JOANNES CINNAMUS, fir-nam'd the Grammarian, Secretary to the Emperor Manuel Comnenus, under whom he likewise serv'd in the Army, compos'd a History of the Reigns of the Two Emperors nam'd Comneni, viz. John and Manuel, from the Year 1118. to 1176. Leo Allatius gives us this Character of the Author: His Style is fine, (says he) although he often makes use of foreign Terms, and Figures, taken out of the Sophisters Store-house; his Periods are concise and full; but the new Method of their Composition, renders them somewhat harsh and obscure. This Author every where affects to imitate Procopius, and highly extols Manuel Comnenus: He was still living when Andronicus Comnenus usurped the Imperial Throne, by causing Alexis to be put to death. His History, divided into Four Books, was published in Greek and Latin, by Cornelius Tollius, and printed at Utrecht A.D. 1652. M. du Cange, in like manner caus'd it to be printed at the Lowre, divided into Six Books, and illustrated with Annotations.

THEORIANUS was sent into Armenia by Manuel Comnenus, to endeavour to procure a reunion between that and the Greek Church. Upon his Arrival there, May 15. 1170. he acquainted Nausifius their Patriarch with the Design of his Embassy, and deliver'd to him the Emperor's Letter: The Patriarch receiv'd it with due Acknowledgments of his Imperial Majesty's Favour, and agree'd to enter into Conference with Theorianus about the Opinions and Customs in which the Armenians differ'd from the Greeks. Their first Conferences were concerning the Error of the Armenians, with respect to our Saviour's Incarnation. Theorianus endeavour'd to convince them by a great number of Testimonies of the Fathers, that there were Two Natures in Jesus Christ; and after having discours'd largely of that Doctrine, he discuss'd the other Questions of less Consequence, which were in debate between the Greeks and Armenians, relating to the Festival of Christmas-day, the Trisagion, the Consecration of consecrated Oils with Olives, and not with Rape-seed; and the Custom of singing the Divine Office without the Church, which was disapproved by the Greeks. Theorianus vindicated the Practice of the later in those Points, and oblig'd the Armenian Patriarch to acknowledge that they were not blame-worthy, and that these different Customs ought not to be insisted on, provided they were agree'd as to the same matters of Faith. In order to fix his Judgment, Theorianus produc'd the Decree of the Fourth General Council, and shew'd that it was conformable to St. Cyril's Doctrine. The Armenian Patriarch approv'd it, and engag'd to use his utmost endeavours to get the consent of those of his Nation, and to cause the Bishops to sign a Confession of Faith, by virtue of which they should acknowledge the Council of Chalcedon, and anathematize Eutychius, Dioscorus, Severus, Timotheus, Aelurus, and other Adversaries of that Council; and lastly, for that his part, he wou'd always adhere to the Faith of the Greek Church, and continue in its Communion. Theorianus wrote, with his own hand, a faithful Relation of these Conferences, and of every thing that was said and propos'd on both sides. He solidly confutes, and in a very methodical manner, the Error of the Monophysites, and discour-ses with a great deal of moderation, of those Points that relate to the different Customs in use among the Armenians and Greeks. This Work was published by Lewenclavius, and printed at Basil A.D. 1578. as also afterwards in the Greek and Latin Edition of the Bibliotheca Patrum, by Fronto Ducaur.

HUGO ETHERIANUS flourished at the same time, and under the same Emperor Manuel, being a Native of Tuscany, from whence he pass'd to Constantinople, and resided in the Court of that Emperor, who had a very great respect for him. However he did not forbear to write a Treatise in vindication of the Latins against the Greeks, in which he proves, that the Holy Ghost proceeds both from the Father and the Son. It is divided into Three Books, and dedicated to Pope Alexander III. He is also the Author of another Piece, concerning the State of the Soul separated from the Body, in which he treats of the Original and Nature of the Soul; of its Union with the Body, and Separation from it; of its Sentiments and Functions in the future State; of the Resurrection of the Body; and of the Day of Judgment. These Works were printed at Basil A.D. 1543. and are also contain'd in the Bibliotheca Patrum.

NICEPHORUS BRYENNIUS, a Macedonian, the Grand-son of that Nicephorus, whose Eyes the Emperor Nicephorus Botaniata caus'd to be put out, for aspiring to the Empire, and the Son-in-Law of Alexis Comnenus, had the greatest share in the Administration of State-Affairs under that Emperor. He improv'd his Skill in Politicks by an assiduous application to the Study of the Liberal Sciences, and has left us a Byzantine History from the Year 1057. to 1081. which was printed in Greek with Father Poussin's Version and Notes at Paris A.D. 1661. and with those of M. du Cange at the end of Cinnamus, in the Volume of the Byzantine History set forth in 1670.

In the same Place is likewise to be found the Alexis of ANNA COMNENA, the Wife of Nicephorus, and the Daughter of the said Emperor Alexis Comnenus; she relates therein the History of her Father's reign, from the Year 1069. to 1118. All Learned Men generally give great Encomiums of this Work, by reason of its elegancy, and extol the Genius and Learning of that Princess.

Princes. The Alexias is divided into Fifteen Books; the Eight first of these were published in Greek with Häschelius's Version and Notes at Augsburg A. D. 1610. and the entire Work was afterwards printed with the Translation and Notes of the same Author at Paris in 1651. This last Edition was follow'd with that of M. du Cange, who likewise illustrated it with excellent Annotations.

Johannes Zonaras, Secretary of State at Constantinople. At the same time liv'd JOANNES ZONARAS, Secretary of State to the Emperor Alexis Comnenus, who having lost his Wife and Children embraced the Monastick Life, and to mitigate his grief apply'd himself to study, and to the compiling of Books; insomuch that we are indebted to his learned Lucubrations for a great number of very useful Works. Viz.

His Annals, or a compendious History from the Creation of the World to the Death of Alexis Comnenus, which happen'd A. D. 1118. This Work was taken out of divers Authors, by way of Extracts, and divided into Three Tomes. It was printed in Greek with Wolsius's Latin Version at Basil A. D. 1557. and afterwards M. du Cange set forth a new Edition at the Louvre in 1686. which he divided into Eighteen Books.

Commentaries on the Canons of the Apostles, as also on those of the Councils, and of the Canonical Epistles of the Greek Fathers; which were printed in Greek and Latin at Paris A. D. 1618. and 1622. and in Dr. Beverege's Collection at Oxford in 1672.

A Discourse of Impurity, inserted in the Fifth Book of the 7us Græco-Romanum.

A Canon of the Virgin Mary, or a kind of Hymn, containing certain Collects, or short Prayers, made to the blessed Virgin against all Hereticks. Some Part of this Work was published in Latin in the Bibliotheca Patrum, and was afterwards set forth entire in Greek and Latin, in the Third Tome of Cotelierius's Monuments of the Greek Church.

A Preface to St. Gregory Nazienzen's Poetical Pieces, printed at Venice A. D. 1563. and a Treatise to prove that a Widow cannot marry her Husband's Cofin German.

Fifty six Letters, that are in the Emperor's Library at Vienna, and some of which were published by Vulcanius in his Notes on the Treatise of St. Cyril of Alexandria, concerning the Anthropomorphites.

Besides these Works, Lambecius makes mention of an Explication of the Canons relating to the Festival of Easter, some Fragments of which were published by Gretser. Allatius likewise cites his Discourse on the Adoration of the Cross; the Life of St. Sylvester; a Discourse about the Presentation of Jesus Christ in the Temple; and a Panegyrick on Sophronius Patriarch of Jerusalem. Pontanus makes mention of some of his Poems on the Procession of the Holy Ghost; and lastly, Henry Stephen had a Lexicon suppos'd to be written by the same Zonaras.

Joannes Phocas, a Greek Monk. JOANNES PHOCAS, a Native of Crete, after having serv'd in the Wars under the Emperor Manuel Comnenus, embraced the Monastick Life, and made a Journey to the Holy Land, A. D. 1185. Upon his return, he wrote a Relation of what he had seen and heard, which was published by Allatius, in his Collection of Miscellaneous Works, and bears the Title of, A brief Description of the Places from Antioch to Jerusalem, and those of Syria and Phœnicia.

Neophytus, a Recluse. NEOPHYTUS, a Greek Priest, and Recluse Monk, flourish'd A. D. 1190. M. Cotelierius set forth a Piece written by this Monk, containing a Relation of the Calamities that beset the Island of Cyprus, when taken by the English, A. D. 1191.

John, Bishop of Lydda. JOHN Bishop of Lydda, flourish'd in the Year 1194. and M. Baluzius has published a Letter by this Author to Michael chosen Patriarch of Jerusalem.

George Xiphylin, Patriarch of Constantinople. GEORGE XIPHYLIN, elected Patriarch of Constantinople in the Year 1193. besides an Ordinance about the Jurisdiction of Territories, which is extant in the Collection of the Greek and Roman Laws; Two Synodical Statutes, concerning the Right of consecrating Churches by setting up Crosses in them; of which Custom Allatius makes mention in the Treatise of the Georgians, and of their Writings. This Author died A. D. 1199.

Demetrius Tornicius. DEMETRIUS TORNICIUS wrote in the Year 1193. under the Name of the Emperor Isaac, a Treatise of the Procession of the Holy Ghost, which is extant in the French King's Library. Allatius has likewise produc'd the beginning of it, in his Book call'd Concordia Ecclesie Orientalis ac Occidentalis.

Lupus Protospatius. LUPUS PROTOSPATUS, Captain of the Eastern Emperor's Life-Guards, and a Native of Apulia, compos'd a Chronicle of Occurrences in the Kingdom of Naples, from the Year 860. to 1102. This History was published by Antonio Caraccioli, a Theatin Monk, who caus'd it to be printed at Naples in 1626. with a Continuation to the Year 1519.

Michael Anchialius, Patriarch of Constantinople. MICHAEL ANCHIALIUS, who was promoted to the Patriarchal See of Constantinople in the Year 1167. and honour'd by Balsamon, with the Title of most excellent of the Sages, compil'd certain Synodical Statutes, prohibiting Clergy-men to take upon them any secular Employments, or to ordain Clerks in another Diocess, &c. which are contain'd in the Collection of the Roman Laws, L. 3. p. 227. He also wrote an Account of the Conference he had with the Emperor Manuel Comnenus, when the Pope's Legates came to Constantinople to negotiate an Union between the Two Churches; some Fragments of which are produced by Allatius.

Theodorus Balsamon, Patriarch of Antioch. THEODORUS BALSAMON, Chancellor and Library-keeper of the Church of Constantinople, and Provost of that of Blachern, was nominated Patriarch of Antioch; but in regard that that City was taken up by the Latins, he was never able to get himself actually install'd, and was also flatter'd by the means of the Emperor Isaac Comnenus, with the vain hopes of being advanced to the Patriarchal See of Constantinople. He flourish'd from the Year 1180. to 1203. and during that time compos'd divers excellent and very useful Books, relating to the Canon Law of the Eastern Eastern Countreys : The chief of which are his Commentaries on the Apostolical Canons ; the General and Particular Councils ; and the Canonical Letters of the Greek Fathers. He undertook this Work by the special Order of the Emperor Manuel Comnenus, and of Michael Anchialius Patriarch of Constantinople, and compleated it under the Patriarch George Xiphylin, to whom he dedicated it. It was printed in Greek and Latin at Paris A.D. 1620. and in Dr. Beverege's Pandects of Canons, printed at Oxford in 1672.

Balsamon in like manner wrote a Commentary on Photius's Nomo-canon, and a Collection of Ecclesiastical Constitutions, printed in the Second Tome of the Bibliotheca Juris Canonici by Justellus ; as also Answers to divers Questions relating to the Canon-Law, particularly, of the Erection of Bishopricks into Metropolitan Sees ; of such Persons as are chosen Bishops of the Eastern Churches ; of the Right of the Patriarchs over the Monasteries ; of Festivals, &c. These last Works are to be found with an Answer to certain Questions propos'd by Mark Patriarch of Alexandria, and Resolutions to several others in the Second, Fifth, and Seventh Book of Lewenclavius's Collection of the Greek and Roman Laws. M. Cotelerius has likewise furnished us with Two Letters of this Author, viz. One written to the People of Antioch, about the Fasts they ought to observe ; and the other to Theodosius, Superiour of Papicius's Monasteries, concerning the Custom of Shaving. Admitting, and Investing with the Habit, such Persons as present themselves to embrace the Monastick Life, a little while after their appearance, without obliging them to submit to a Probation of Three Years. The First of these Letters is inserted in the end of the Second Tome of the Monuments of the Greek Church ; and the Second, in the Third Tome of the same Work. Balsamon without doubt is the most able Canonist that appear'd among the Greeks in these later Times.

JOANNES CAMATERUS, Chartophylax, and afterward Patriarch of Constantinople, in the end of this Century, wrote in the Year 1199. a Letter to Pope Innocent, in which he declares that he cannot but admire that the Church of Rome shou'd assume the Title of the Catholick or Universal Church. There is also in the Collection call'd Jus Græco-Romanum, a Statute of this Patriarch about the Marriages of Coffin Germans : He died A. D. 1206.

CHAP. XV.

Of the Original of Scholastical Divinity, and of the first Divines of that Faculty who flourished in the Twelfth Century.

THE Manner of treating of the Christian Religion, and of its Mysteries, has not been always uniform in the several Ages of the Church ; but has been chang'd at several times, according to the various Occasions, or the different Inclinations of Men. The Apostles contented themselves only to teach with much simplicity the Doctrine they receiv'd from Jesus Christ ; to propose it to Believers as the Object of their Faith ; and to render it credible by the Means of Authority, by the Testimony of the Prophets, by our Saviour's Resurrection, and by Miracles. They never observ'd the difficult Points that might be form'd from the sacred Mysteries ; neither did they take any Pains to make a thorough search into them, nor to discover all the Consequences arising from them, much less to explain them according to the Principles of Philosophy and human Reason. Neither were the holy Fathers, nor Ecclesiastical Writers, who liv'd in the First Ages of the Church, more careful to insist on the Explication of these Mysteries ; nor did they make use of Philosophy, but only to extirpate the Errors of the Pagans, relating to their Gods, Idols, and false Worship, which might be easily confuted by the Light of Reason, and the Authority of the Philosophers. As for the Jews, and Primitive Hereticks, they only alledg'd to convince them, the Authority of the holy Scriptures, and of Tradition, and the general Belief of all the Churches in the World ; and in the Disputes they had with them, they never undertook to give particular Reasons for the several Mysteries, but only to prove, that they ought to be believ'd. It is true indeed, that in Procees of time, the Heresies gave occasion more thoroughly to examine the Doctrines, and to fix the Terms that ought to be us'd in explaining them, and to draw Consequences from the Articles of Faith which were formally reveal'd ; but the Fathers enter'd upon the Discussion of those Points, being only incited by a kind of necessity : Neither were they so bold as to start a great number of new Questions relating to the Mysteries, nor to resolve them according to Philosophical Principles. Upon the whole, as they did not commit to writing any Speculations about Doctrinal Points, but only with respect to the Heretical Opinions ; so neither did they compose any particular Theological Treatise concerning the Doctrines of the Christian Religion, of set purpose, but they treated of them whenever there was occasion to refute some new Heresy.

Of the Original of Scholastical Divinity, and of the first School-men.

Origen was the first who undertook to compile as it were a Body of Divinity, in his Works. The Principles: But this new Undertaking did not at all prove successful, insomuch that the Author relying too much upon his own knowledge, and being desirous to accommodate the Doctrine of Christianity to the Maxims of Plato's Philosophy, had the misfortune to fall into many Errors which have sullied his Memory. But such Inconveniences did not happen to those Divines, who contented themselves only to teach with the simplicity of Catechists, the principal Mysteries of our Religion contain'd in the Apostles Creed, and to prove them by Passages taken out of the holy Scriptures. In the Ages following the great Heresies of the Arians, Nestorians, Eutychians, &c. the Reverend Fathers were oblig'd to treat at large of the Mysteries of the Trinity, and of the Incarnation; but the holy Scriptures, and Tradition, were the only Principles on which they grounded their Proofs, and they only made use of Argumentations to discover the Sense of the Passages of Scripture, and of the Ancient Fathers. The same thing was done with respect to other Heresies; and we do not find any other Arguments alledg'd to refute them, nor any other Rules made use of in the Councils to condemn them: But by little and little an over-weening Curiosity induced Men to start divers new Questions relating to Theological Matters, particularly the Mysteries and other difficult Points of the Christian Religion. Indeed at first the Authority of holy Scriptures, and of Tradition, was only brought to decide them, but afterwards Philosophy was also call'd in to their assistance, more especially the Platonick, that was then most in vogue, and which seem'd most conformable to the Rules of Christianity. The Author of the Works ascrib'd to St. Dionysius the Areopagite, who wrote in the end of the Fifth Century, follow'd this Method, and treated in his Books of the Divine Attributes, and Hierarchy, of divers Theological Questions, according to the Principles of the Platonick Philosophers.

Some time after, Boethius, a Man well vers'd in Aristotle's Philosophy, made use of his Maxims to explain the Mysteries of the Trinity, and of the Incarnation; which engag'd him in Debates about some very subtil and intricate Questions. But St. Joannes Damascenus is the first who undertook methodically to discuss all sorts of Theological Questions, and to reduce them into an entire Body. In the Ninth Century, Joannes Scotus Erigena apply'd Aristotle's Method and Principles to the resolution of several Questions relating to Points of Divinity; but his subtil Notions having lead him into divers Errors; his Doctrine and Method were rejected by the Divines of his Time. The study of the most necessary and most obvious Points being neglected in the Tenth Century, it is not to be admir'd, that no application was made to those abstruse and difficult Questions; so that Aristotle's Philosophy was not begun to be taught in the Publick Schools, according to the Method of the Arabians, till the beginning of the Eleventh Century; neither was there any use of it made at first, in Theological Matters: But in process of time, Men, whose Heads were fill'd with those Notions, insensibly introduced them into Divinity, and apply'd them not only to illustrate and decide ordinary Questions, but to form a great number of new ones, which were never heard of before. John the Sophister, Roscelinus, and St. Anselm, were the first who put this Method in practice; and after them Abaelardus, Gillebert de la Porrée, and many others, brought it into vogue, and made publick Lectures on that subject. Otho of Freisingen introduced it into Germany, and within a little while after, it took place almost throughout all Christendom.

But inasmuch as it is difficult not to go astray in following a new Track, some of the first Authors of this manner of handling Theological Points, particularly Roscelinus, Abaelardus, Gillebert de la Porrée, as also Amaury or Amalaricus, and many others, in the beginning of the following Century, fell into divers Errors; or at least expressed themselves in such a manner as was condemn'd by those Persons, who adher'd to the Sentiments and Method of Discourse us'd by the Ancient Fathers. There also happen'd another Inconvenience, which was, that the different Opinions of these Authors, about the most part of those Questions, gave occasion to many Contentions and Disputes among the Divines; and in regard that the number of the Questions encreased daily, and every one to maintain his Opinions had recourse to the most subtil Topicks of the Aristotelean Logic and Metaphysick; the Disputes were almost innumerable, and became so full of Obscurities, Intricacies, and Evasions, that only those who were well vers'd in that Art, were able to comprehend any thing, and thus it was impossible to come to any determination. Besides the uncouth manner of handling the several Subjects, and the barbarous Terms that were us'd, render'd this kind of Study much more disagreeable.

To prevent these Inconveniences, PETER LOMBARD, Bishop of Paris, undertook to make a Collection of the Passages of the Fathers, and chiefly of St. Hilary, St. Ambrose, St. Jerom, and St. Augustin, on the principal Questions that were then in debate among the School-men; imagining by that means to put an end to their Disputes, and to form such Decisions, as the Authority of those Persons, on whose Testimonies they were grounded, might render venerable, and might even cause them to be receiv'd with common consent. This Collection was call'd, The Book of the Sentences, (a Title then usually impos'd on Theological Works) and being prefer'd before all others, was receiv'd with so general approbation, that in a little time, it became the only Model of Scholastical Divinity that was publickly us'd in the Schools; insomuch that the Author of it was call'd, by way of excellency, The Master of the Sentences: But the Doctors of the Faculty, not contenting themselves with the simplicity of this Work, made voluminous Commentaries on the Text, in which they renewed their Contentions; reviv'd the same Questions; and again intermix'd, with Theological Matters, the Principles of Philosophy, and the Maxims of Aristotle, which were never us'd by the Master of the Sentences: Nay, some proceeded so far, as to find fault with his Decisions, although they were express'd in the very words of the Fathers. Thus Pope Alexander

Peter
Lombard, Bishop of Paris.

der III. censur'd one of his Expressions; the Abbot Joachim wrote a Book against him; and the Faculty of Paris drew up a Catalogue of Articles, in which the Master of the Sentences was not usually follow'd. However, he may be esteem'd as the chief of all the School-Divines; for although in his Work he has made use of a Method quite different from the others, as to the manner of discussing the Theological Questions, yet his Book has always serv'd as their Model or Ground-work, and apparently they have done nothing else but commented upon it. Upon which account we are oblig'd to enlarge somewhat more on the Life, and Personal Endowments, of Peter Lombard, as also on the Contents of his Work.

He was born in a Village near Novaria in Lombardy, from whence his Sir-name was taken, and perform'd part of his Studies at Bononia, where there was at that time a famous University, more especially for the study of the Civil Law; but in regard that those of France were much more noted, with respect to the Faculty of Divinity, he took a Resolution to go thither, having obtain'd a Letter of recommendation from the Bishop of Lucca to St. Bernard, in which he entreated him to take a particular Care of Peter Lombard's Education, whilst he apply'd himself to study in France. St. Bernard provided all things necessary for his Subsistence, as long as he resided at Rheims; and upon his departure for Paris, recommended him to Gildin Abbot of St. Victor, to the end that he might maintain him Gratis. Peter, in a little time, acquir'd a great deal of Reputation, and was nominated Professor of Divinity in the University of Paris, of which he is also styl'd President by the contemporary Writers. He follow'd this Employment with so good success, that the Bishoprick of Paris being vacant in 1150. Philip Arch-deacon of Paris, the Son of King Lewes the Great, who was cholen Bishop of that City by the Chapter, resign'd his Place to him, and condescended so far as to permit a Stranger of an obscure Parentage, and of as mean Fortunes, to be preferr'd before him, by reason of his extraordinary Learning; although he was the Son and Brother of a King: A singular and rare Example of Humility! However, Peter Lombard did not long enjoy this Dignity; for he died July 20. A. D. 1164. and was buried in St. Marcel's Church, where the Licentiates of the Faculty of Paris are oblig'd every Year to compose a Form of Divine Service in honour of his Memory.

This Author wrote, besides the Book of Sentences, certain Commentaries on the Psalms, and on St. Paul's Epistles, which in effect are almost nothing else but Extracts out of the Commentaries of St. Hilary, St. Ambrose, St. Augustin, Cassiodorus, and Remegius, or Remy of Auxerre. The Commentary on the Book of Psalms was printed at Paris A. D. 1541. and that on St. Paul's Epistles at the same Place in 1535.

His Collection of the Sentences is divided into Four Books, and every Book into several Sections; the Division of the whole Work being grounded on St. Augustin's Axiom, That Knowledge has Two Objects, viz. Things, and Signs; that Things are divisible into those that may be enjoy'd, and those which are only to be us'd; that is to say, God and the Creatures. In the First Book he treats of those Things that ought to be enjoy'd, particularly the Three Persons of the Holy Trinity, and the Divine Attributes. In the Second, he specifies those Things the use of which is only allow'd, namely, the Creatures; discoursing of the Creation of the World; of the Fall of the Angels, and that of Man; of Grace and Free Will; of original and actual Sins, &c. In the Third, he gives an Account of the Mystery of the Incarnation of Jesus Christ, by virtue of which Mankind is delivered from Sin; of Faith, Charity, and the other practical Virtues; and of the Commandments of God, which must be observ'd for the attaining to Salvation. The Fourth and last Book, contains Matters relating to the Signs or Sacraments of the Church, except the Seven last Sections, in which he treats of the Resurrection; of the last Judgment; and of the future State.

In the First Section of the First Book, he examines what are the Things which ought to be enjoy'd, and what are those that are only to be us'd, as also, what it is to enjoy and use Things; who are the Persons capable of enjoying and using them, and by what means both the one and the other is done. Then he proceeds to resolve these Questions according to the Maxims of St. Augustin, who maintains that we ought to enjoy God alone; that is to say, we ought only to adhere to him as our ultimate End, and to love him upon his own Account; and that we ought not to set our Affections on the Creatures; that is to say, not to love them but for God's sake, and not to adhere to them any farther than it seems good to the Will of God.

He proves, in the Second Section, the Mystery of the Holy Trinity, by Passages taken out of the Old and New Testament.

In the Third, he explains after what manner God may be known by the Creatures, and brings Comparisons taken from the Creatures, that may serve to give some Idea of the Mystery of the Trinity; and insists more particularly on that of the Soul consisting of divers Faculties, which are nothing but the Soul itself. He observes, at the same time, that this Comparison, is not alike in all Points, and shews the Difference.

In the Fourth, he discusses this Question, Whether it may be said, that God the Father is begotten himself; or whether it ought to be said, that he begot another God? And concludes with St. Augustin, that it ought to be affirm'd, that God the Father begot another Person, who is God, and the same with him in Substance.

In the Fifth, he examines another Question about the Generation of the Word; viz. Whether it may be said, that the Father begot the Divine Essence, or the Divine Essence begot the Son; or whether one Essence produced another; or whether the Essence be neither produced, nor producing? He relates divers Passages of the Fathers concerning these Questions, and maintains, that it cannot be said, that God the Father produced the Divine Essence; or that the Essence produced the Son; or that the Essence produced another Essence: But that it must be expressed, that the Father produced the Son and the Holy Ghost, who are two Persons of the same Substance, and of the same Essence with the Father.

In the Sixth, he enquires, Whether the Father begot the Son, Volens aut Nolens; (as it is usually termed,) that is to say, by Necessity, or by his own Will? He replies, with St. Augustin, that the Son of God was begotten according to Nature, and not according to Will; and that although God was willing to beget him, yet his Generation is not an Effect of that Will.

In the Seventh, he proposes another more subtil Question; viz. Whether the Father were endu'd with a particular Will and Power to beget his Son? If an Answer be made Affirmatively, it then follows, that the Father has a Power and Will which the Son has not, in regard that the latter is neither able nor willing to beget. He resolves this Difficulty by saying, that Generation is not an Effect either of the Will, or of the Power, but of Nature, and that is not a Thing. Afterwards he explains in what Sense St. Augustin said, that the Son had Power to beget; that is to say, that it is not by reason of Impotency that he did not beget,

In the Eighth Section, he treats of the Nature, Immutability, and Purity of God: He affirms, that he is improperly call'd a Substance, and that there is nothing in God, that is not God himself.

In the Ninth, he discourses of the Generation of the Son from Eternity.

In the Tenth, he begins to treat of the Holy Ghost, and shews in what Sense he is call'd Charity.

In the Eleventh, he proves that he proceeds from the Father and the Son.

In the Twelfth, he explains in what Sense it may be said, that the Holy Ghost proceeds chiefly from the Father; viz. in regard that the Son, from whom he proceeds, as well as from the Father, receives his Nature from the Father. He adds, that in this Sense it is said, that the Father sends the Holy Ghost by his Son.

In the Thirteenth, he shews, that human Understanding cannot comprehend the Reason of the Difference between the Generation of the Word, and the Procession of the Holy Ghost; and declares in what Sense the Holy Ghost may be said to be Ingenitus.

In the Fourteenth, he treats particularly of the temporal Procession, or Communication of the Holy Ghost; and maintains, that it is really imparted to Men; and that Men, though never so Holy, cannot have power to confer it, but only the Father and the Son.

He adds, in the Fifteenth Section, that the Holy Ghost likewise communicates himself; and debates on that occasion divers Questions relating to the Mission of the Son.

The same Subject is continu'd in the Sixteenth Section.

In the Seventeenth, the Author represents several Questions about the Mission of the Holy Ghost.

He explains, in the Eighteenth, in what Sense the Holy Ghost is call'd a Gift, and how he is given to us.

In the Nineteenth, he treats of the Equality of the Three Persons in the Holy Trinity, and of their Union in the same Essence.

In the Twentieth, he proves the Equality of Power among the Three Divine Persons.

In the Twenty first, he shews in what Sense it may be said, that the Father is God alone, the Son God alone, and the Holy Ghost God alone.

In the Twenty second, he distinguishes the Terms that agree with the Three Persons in common, and do not agree with any in particular, as that of the Trinity: Those that agree with every one of the Three Persons, which express the absolute Attributes, or relative to the Creatures; as the being Infinite, Almighty, Creator, &c. And lastly, those that agree with one Person, but not with another; as to be the Father, to be Begotten, to be Given, &c.

He shews, in the Twenty third, that all the Terms relating to the Substance cannot be said in the Plural Number, of the Three Persons of the Trinity, but only in the Singular. Thus it is not said, The Father, the Son, and the Holy Ghost, are Almighty; although every one of these Persons is declar'd to be Almighty. He excepts the word Person, which cannot be said of the Three Divine Persons in the Singular Number, but only in the Plural; for it cannot be said, that the Father, the Son, and the Holy Ghost, are one Person, but that they are Three Persons, or according to the Greeks, Three Hypostases.

In the Twenty fourth, and in the Twenty fifth, he examines divers Questions about the Terms of Unity, Trinity, and the Distinction in speaking of the Trinity.

In the Twenty sixth, Twenty seventh, Twenty eighth, and Twenty ninth, he discourses of the Relative Properties of the Three Divine Persons among themselves.

In the Thirtieth, he treats of the Relative Properties of God, with respect to Men; as to be a Creator, &c. and shews, that they do not imply any Change or Alteration in the Divine Nature.

In the Thirty first, he shews, that the Equality and Likeness of the Three Persons are not grounded on their Relative Properties, but on the Identity of their Nature.

In the Thirty second, he lays down Two principal Difficulties; viz. Whether the Father and the Son mutually love one another by the Holy Ghost; or whether the Father be Wise by the Wisdom he has begotten? He acknowledges these Questions to be difficult; yet declares, that there is in God a certain Love, and a certain Wisdom, which are common to the Three Persons, although the Son be a Wisdom which is not the Father, nor the Holy Ghost; and the Holy Ghost a Love, which is neither the Father, nor the Son; nevertheless without imagining Two Wisdoms, or Two Loves, to be in the Trinity.

In the Thirty third, he proposes this Question; viz. Whether the Properties of the Persons are to be distinguished from the Persons themselves, and from the Divine Essence?

He maintains the Negative, and condemns the contrary Opinion as Heretical.

He opposes the same Opinion, in the Thirty fourth Section. and shews, that the Persons are not distinguished from their Nature.

In the Thirty fifth, he begins to treat of the Attributes of God, which deserve a particular Consideration; such are his Omniscience, Omnipotency, Providence, Will, Predestination, &c. The Author shews, in this Section, that these Attributes are relative to the Creatures.

In the Thirty sixth, he makes it appear, that all Things are expos'd to God's Omniscience, as well Good as Evil; although Evil be not an Effect that proceeds from him.

In the Thirty seventh, he treats of the manner of God's being every where, by his Presence, Power, and Essence; discoursing by the way, of the manner how Spiritual Creatures are in a Place, and how they pass from one Place to another.

Afterwards, returning to the Question about the Fore-knowledge of God, he says, that it is not the Cause of Things, if it be taken for a simple Knowledge; but if his Will, Decree, and Inclination, be comprehended under that Name, in that Sense it is the Cause of all Things. That upon this account God cannot be the Author of Evil, because he does not require, nor ordain it, although he knows it. In the end of this Section, is produced the famous Distinction of the Composite, and divided Sensation, to explain how God's Fore-knowledge cannot be erroneous, although the Things might happen otherwise. It is impossible that that should not happen which God has fore-seen; that is to say, that it cannot so fall out that God should fore-see it, and yet that it should not happen; but perhaps it might not happen, and then God should not have fore-seen it.

In the Thirty ninth, he proves, that the Omniscience of God has always been the same, and that it cannot be diminished or augmented.

In the Fortieth, he begins to treat of Predestination, and distinguishes it from Fore-knowledge, in regard that the former has respect only to the Good which God ought to do. Then he again makes use of the Distinction of Composite, and Divided Sensation; to explain in what Sense it may be said, that none of the Predestinated Persons can be damned, nor any of the Reprobate sav'd. He makes Predestination to consist in an eternal Decree of God, by which he elects those whom he thought fit, and prepar'd Graces for them; and Reprobation, in the Fore-knowledge of their Sins, by virtue of which he prepar'd everlasting Punishments to be inflicted on them.

In the Forty first Section, he treats of the Causes of Predestination, and shews that it is purely Gratuitous; and that God has not chosen the Elect, because he knew them to be Righteous, but that he call'd them to be so by his Grace.

From Predestination he passes to Omnipotency; and explains, in the Forty second Section, in what Sense God is Almighty.

He proves, in the Forty third, that God can do an infinite number of Things, which he does not, and confutes the Arguments and Allegations brought by some Persons to evince the contrary.

In the Forty fourth, he shews, that God can absolutely make Things more perfect than he has done, if respect only be had to the Quality of the Creature; but cannot do so, if the Wisdom and Intention of the Creator be taken into consideration. He adds, that God can always do what he has done, because he always has the same Power; although it happens that he cannot do in particular what he has already done.

He treats at large, in the Forty fifth Section, of the Will of God, of its Nature and Effects, and of its different Kinds.

In the Forty sixth, he explains in what Sense the Will of God cannot be ineffectual; and in what Sense he is willing, or unwilling, that Evil be committed: He has no inclination to Evil, yet he is not absolutely willing to prevent it.

He proves, in the Two following Sections, that the Will of God is always efficacious; that whatever he thinks fit inevitably comes to pass, and nothing happens but by his Will: That although he does not approve all the Inclinations of Men, nevertheless he willingly admits the Effects of their depraved Will, but does not approve the Act of it.

In the First Section of the Second Book, the Author confutes the Error of those Hereticks, who admitted Two Principal or Sovereign Beings; shews that God created Angels and Men, and discourses in general of their Nature, and of the End for which they were created.

In the Second, he examines when, and in what Place, the Angels were created.

In the Third, he treats of the State in which they were created; and maintains, that they were created in Uprightness, and that their Fall happen'd but some Moments after their Creation.

He adds, in the following Section, that they did not enjoy perfect Blessedness, till they were confirm'd in Good.

In the Fifth, Sixth, and Seventh Sections, he debates divers Questions about the Fall of the Wicked, and the Confirmation of the Just,

In the Eighth, he follows St. Augustin's Opinion, who believ'd that the Angels have Aerial Bodies; and upon occasion of that Question, he enquires after what manner God was wont to appear to Men, and in what Sense it is said, that the Devils enter into human Bodies.

In the Ninth, he treats of the different Orders of the Angels.

In the Tenth, he examines whether any Angels of different Orders were sent, and gives an Account of the different Opinions of the Fathers, with respect to these Questions.

He proves, in the Eleventh, that every one of the Elect has a Guardian Angel, yet owns that the same Angel may serve as a Guardian to several Persons; and afterwards proceeds to examine in what particulars the Knowledge of the Angels may be augmented.

In the following Sections, to the Sixteenth, he explains the Work of the Creation.

In the Sixteenth and Seventeenth, he treats of the Creation of Man; and enquires in what his likeness to God consists, when his Soul was created, and in what Place he was set.

He discourses, in the Eighteenth, of the Formation of Woman; and endeavours to explain, why she was taken out of the Man's Rib.

In the Nineteenth, he treats of the State of Immortality, in which the First Man was created.

In the Twentieth, he debates concerning the Manner how Men were to be brought into the World, and how they were to be nourished, in case the State of Innocence had continu'd.

In the Twenty first, he gives an Account after what manner the Devil tempted Man.

He discusses, in the Twenty second, divers Questions relating to the Quality and Circumstances of the Sin of Adam and Eve.

In the Twenty third, he resolves this difficult Point, Why God permitted Man to be tempted, knowing that he was to Fall? And afterwards treats of the Knowledge with which the First Man was endu'd.

In the Twenty fourth, he begins to discourse concerning the Free Will, and Grace, inherent in the First Man; and treats in general, in the Two following Sections, of the Freedom of Grace, according to St. Augustin's Principles.

In the Twenty seventh Section, he discourses of Vertue and Merit, which are the Effects of Grace and Free Will.

In the Twenty eighth, he confutes the Errors of the Pelagians, as also those of the Manichees, and of Jovinian.

In the Twenty ninth Section, he returns to the State of the First Man; and after having shewn, that Man even in the State of Innocency stood in need of operating and co-operating Grace, for the doing of Good, he debates certain Questions about the manner how he was expell'd Paradise, and concerning the Tree of Life which preserv'd him from Death.

In the Thirtieth, Thirty first, Thirty second, and Thirty third, he treats of Original Sin, and enquires in what it consists; how it is transferr'd from Parents to their Children; after what manner it is remitted by Baptism; whether Children contract the Sins of their Parents, as Original Sin, &c.

In the Thirty fourth and Thirty fifth, he discourses of the Nature of Actual Sin.

In the Thirty sixth, he shews, that there are Sins which are both the Cause, and the Punishment of Sin.

He makes it appear, in the Thirty seventh, that God is the Author of the Actions, by which Sin is committed, and of the Punishments of Sin, although he is not the Author of Sin.

In the Thirty eighth, he demonstrates, that it is the End and Intention of the Will which renders the Action either Good or Bad; and that in order to its being Good, it must of necessity be terminated in God.

In the Thirty ninth, he enquires into the Reason, Why, of all the natural Faculties, the Will only is susceptible of Sin?

In the Fortieth, he continues to shew, that an Action to be denominated Good, ought to have a good End and Intention.

In the Forty first, he produces divers Passages of St. Augustin, about the necessity of Faith, and of an upright Will, to avoid the committing of Sin; and shews, that the corrupt Will is the cause of Sin.

He enquires, in the Forty second, Whether the Will and the Action be two different Sins? And Afterwards explains the Division of the Seven Capital Sins; shewing, that they derive their original from Pride and Concupiscence.

In the Forty third, he relates the Opinions of St. Ambrose, and St. Augustin, concerning the Sin against the Holy Ghost.

Lastly, he makes it appear, in the Forty fourth Section, that the Power of committing Sin proceeds from God; and that the Power the Devil has to tempt us to Evil, ought to be resisted.

The Third Book begins with the Questions relating to the Mystery of the Incarnation. In the First Section, the Author lays down the Reasons, Why it was more expedient that the Son should be Incarnate, rather than the Father, or the Holy Ghost; and discusses this Question, Whether Two Persons were in like manner capable of being Incarnate.

In the Second Section, he treats of the Union of the Word, with the Body and the Soul.

In the Third, he shews, that the Body taken by the Word was free from the corruption of Sin; that the Virgin Mary herself was then also free from Sin; and that in the very moment that the Humanity of Jesus Christ was conceiv'd, the Word was united to it.

He enquires, in the Fourth, Why the Incarnation is attributed to the Holy Ghost, rather than to the other Persons of the Trinity; and in what Sense it is said Jesus Christ was conceiv'd and born of the Holy Ghost?

In the Fifth Section, he treats of the Union of the Person of the Son with the Human Nature; and shews, that the Word was not united to the Person, but to the Nature.

In the Sixth, he gives an Account of these Propositions; viz. God was made Man, God is Man; and produces Three several Explications of them made by the Fathers.

The same matter is farther handled in the Seventh Distinction.

In the Eighth, he resolves this Question, Whether it may be said, that the Divine Nature was born of the Virgin Mary? And discourses of the two-fold Nativity of Jesus Christ.

In the Ninth, he produces certain Passages of the Fathers, concerning the Adoration of the Body of Jesus Christ.

In the Tenth, he proposes this Question, viz. Whether Jesus Christ, quatenus Man, be a Person, or a Thing? He maintains the Negative, and afterwards proves that the Quality or Title of Adoptive Son cannot be appropriated to him.

In the Eleventh, he asserts, that neither ought Jesus Christ to be call'd a Creature, without adding quatenus Man.

In the Twelfth, he discusses divers Questions; viz. Whether it may be said of Jesus Christ as Man, that he always was, or that it was possible that he might not be God? He determines, that it cannot be said of the Person of Jesus Christ, but only of his Human Nature.

In the Thirteenth and Fourteenth Sections, he treats of Knowledge, Grace, and the Power of Jesus Christ, quatenus Man.

In the Fifteenth and Sixteenth, he proves, that Jesus Christ took upon him the Infirmities of Human Nature, Sin and Ignorance only excepted, and that he was capable of undergoing Sufferings.

In the Seventeenth, he explains the two-fold Will of Jesus Christ.

In the Eighteenth, he discourses of what Jesus Christ merited for himself, and of what he merited for us.

In the Nineteenth, he treats of Redemption.

In the Twentieth, he enquires, Why Jesus Christ redeem'd us by his Passion and Death? And whether he could not have done it by some other means?

In the Twenty first, he proposes this Question; viz. Whether the Word remain'd united to the Body of Jesus Christ, as well as to his Soul, after his Death? And concludes in the Affirmative.

In the Twenty second, he enquires, Whether it may be said, that Jesus Christ was Man during the time that his Body lay in the Sepulchre?

In the following Sections, he treats of Faith, Hope, and Charity.

In the Thirty third, he discourses of the Four Cardinal Vertues.

In the Thirty fourth, of the Seven Gifts of the Holy Ghost, and chiefly of the Fear of God.

In the Thirty fifth, he explains the difference between Wisdom and Knowledge.

In the Thirty sixth, he treats of the Connexion of all the Vertues, and of the Relation they have to Charity.

The Four last Sections of this Book, contain a compendious Explication of the Decalogue.

The Holy Sacraments are the principal Subject treated of in the last Book.

In the first Section, he gives a Definition of the Sacraments; shews the Causes of their Institution; observes the difference between those of the Old and New Law; and treats in particular of Circumcision, which he believes to have been so necessary for the remission of Original Sin, that he affirms, that the Children of the Jews, who died without partaking of that Sacrament, were consign'd to Damnation.

In the Second, after having nominated the Seven Sacraments of the New Law, he discourses of the Baptism by St. John the Baptist.

In the Third, he treats of the Baptism of Jesus Christ, and after having confirm'd St. Ambrose's Opinion, that Baptism might be absolutely administer'd in the Name of Jesus Christ, he enquires, When the Baptism of Jesus Christ was instituted, and under what Form the Apostles baptized Persons? As also, Why Water is us'd in the Administration of this Sacrament, and no other Liquor; and how many Immersions ought to be made in Baptizing?

In the Fourth Section, he treats of the Effects of Baptism; shewing how some Persons receive the Sacrament, and the Grace of the Sacrament; and how others receive the Sacrament without the Grace, and the Grace without the Sacrament. He proves that Infants receive both; and adds, that they even receive Actual Grace, which afterwards enables them to perform good Actions.

In the Fifth, he makes it appear from St. Augustin's Principles, that Baptism administer'd by an unworthy Priest, is no less Holy than that which is perform'd by the Hands of a worthy one; because the effective Power of Baptizing is inherent in Jesus Christ, which he does not communicate to the Ministers.

In the Sixth Section, he observes, that the Bishops, or Priests, have a Right to administer this Sacrament; although in case of necessity it may be done by Lay-men, and even by Women: And that it is valid by whomsoever it be administer'd, nay when perform'd by Hereticks, provided it it be done in the Name of the Holy Trinity. He asserts, that an Infant cannot be baptized in the Mother's Belly, and afterwards handles several other Questions relating to the Form and Ceremonies of Baptism.

In the Seventh Section, he treats of the Sacrament of Confirmation; and at first observes, that the Form of this Sacrament are the Words pronounced by the Priest, when he anoints the Forehead of the Baptized Persons with the Holy Chrism. The Author adds, that the Administration of this Sacrament was always reserv'd to the Bishops; that they alone are capable of administering it effectually in due Form; and that it cannot be reiterated.

He begins, in the Eighth Section, to discourse of the Sacrament of the Eucharist; and after having shewn some of the ancient Figures of this Sacrament, proceeds to treat of its Institution; of its Form, which he makes to consist in these Words, This is my Body, this is my Blood; and of the Things contain'd therein. He says, Three Things are to be distinguished in the Eucharist; viz. the Sacrament consisting in the visible Species of the Bread and Wine; the Sacrament and the Thing, which is the proper Body, and the proper Blood of our Lord, contain'd under the Species; and the Thing, which is not the Sacrament; that is to say, the mystical Body of Jesus Christ, or the inward Grace.

In the Ninth Section, he distinguishes Two Manners of receiving the Body of Jesus Christ, viz. one Sacramental, which is common to the worthy, and to the unworthy Communicants; and the other Spiritual, which is peculiar only to the former.

In the Tenth, he proves the Real Presence, and the changing of the Bread and Wine into the Body and Blood of Jesus Christ, and refutes the Opinion of those, who believe the Eucharist to be only a Figure.

In the Eleventh, he at first enquires of what Nature this Change is, and proves it to be substantial; inasmuch that the Body and Blood of Jesus Christ are under the Accidents, which before cover'd the Substance of the Bread and Wine, which is annihilated or return'd to the first Matter. He confutes those Persons who asserted, that the Substance of the Bread remain'd after the Consecration; and afterwards gives an Account, why the Body and Blood of Jesus Christ are administer'd to us under Two different Kinds, and why Water is intermixed with the Wine.

In the Twelfth, he endeavours to explain divers Questions relating to the Eucharistical Species, and affirms, that the Accidents remain therein without the Subject; and that they only are broken and divided into many Parts. Afterwards he discourses of the Quality which is peculiar to this Sacrament, as also of its Institution and Effects.

In the Thirteenth Section, he acknowledges, that unworthy Ministers may consecrate the Elements; but denies, that it can be done by excommunicated Persons, and declared Hereticks.

In the Fourteenth, he begins to treat of Repentance; distinguishing the Vertue of Repentance from the Sacrament of Penance: He gives divers Definitions of Repentance, and shews the Necessity of it, as also that it may be often reiterated.

In the Fifteenth, he proves that one cannot be truly penitent for one Sin, without actually repenting of all.

In the Sixteenth, he distinguishes the Three Parts of Repentance; viz. the Compunction of the Heart, the Confession of the Mouth, and the Satisfaction of Works; and discourses in particular of the satisfactions that ought to be made for venial Sins.

He treats of Confession, in the Seventeenth Section, and shews, that is requisite to confess ones Sins to a Priest, in order to obtain the remission of them.

In the Eighteenth, he treats of the Sacerdotal Power, and of the use of the Keys; and after having produced different Opinions relating to that matter, concludes, That God alone has the Power of absolutely binding and loosing the Sinner, by cleansing the Pollution of his Sin, and remitting the Penalty of Eternal Damnation: That the Priests do indeed bind and loose, by declaring that such Persons are bound or loosed by God, and by imposing Penance, or by readmitting to the Communion those whom they have excommunicated.

In the Nineteenth, he discourses of the Qualities requisite in Ministers, who are employ'd to bind and loose Sinners; nevertheless he acknowledges that unworthy Priests have the Power of the Keys as well as the worthy.

The Twentieth Section, contains the Opinions of the Fathers concerning the Repentance of dying Persons.

In the Twenty first, he discourses of the Expiation of light Sins by the Pains of Purgatory; of the general Confession of venial Sins; and of the Penalties to be inflicted on Priests, who divulge matters related to them in Confession.

In the Twenty second, he proposes this Question; viz. Whether Sins that have been once forgiven, return by the Commission of following Sins? And after having produced the Reasons on both sides, leaves the Question undecided.

In the Twenty third Distinction, he treats of the Sacrament of Unction, which he believes to have been instituted by the Apostles; the Effect of it being the remission of Sins, and the comfort of the Sick Person: He also proves that this Sacrament may be reiterated.

In the Twenty fourth, he treats of the Functions and Dignity of the Seven Orders, and of the different Dignities among Bishops.

In the Twenty fifth, he discourses of the validity of Ordinations made by Hereticks; and after having produced different Opinions, seems to approve that of those who affirm, that Persons who were

were ordain'd in the Church still retain the Power of ordaining, though they turn Hereticks; but deny that those whom they ordain have the same Power. Afterwards he treats of Simoniackal Ordinations, and of the Age requisite for admission into Orders.

In the Twenty sixth, he shews the Antiquity of the Sacrament of Marriage.

In the Twenty seventh, he enquires in what Marriage consists, and distinguishes a Promise of future Marriage, from Marriage contracted by the present Consent of the Parties.

In the Twenty eighth, Twenty ninth, and Thirtieth, he gives a farther Account of the Conditions that ought to be annexed to such a Consent as is necessary for the Consummation of Marriage.

In the Thirty first, he explains the Advantages of Marriage, which are Fidelity, the Lawful Procreation of Children, and the Benefit of the Sacrament, and treats of the contrary Vices.

In the Thirty second, he discourses of Matters relating to the Continency of married Persons at certain times.

In the Thirty third, he relates divers Considerations of the Fathers, with respect to the Polygamy of the Patriarchs.

In the Thirty fourth, he treats of the Impediments that render Persons incapable of contracting Marriage, and which make their Marriage void and of none Effect.

In the Thirty fifth, he shews that a Man may be divorced from his Wife upon the Account of Adultery, and that they may be afterwards reconcil'd. The Author adds, that he who has committed Adultery with a Woman may marry her, after her Husband's decease, provided he were not accessory to his Death, and did not promise his Wife to marry her in his Life-time.

In the Thirty sixth Section, he treats of the Impediment that arises from the difference of Age, and Condition between the Parties, who contract Marriage.

In the Thirty seventh, he discourses of the Injunction of Celibacy observ'd by Bishops, Priests, Deacons, and Sub-deacons, and of Pope Calixtus's Ordinance, declaring such Marriages null.

In the Thirty eighth, he treats of the Impediment of a Vow.

In the Thirty ninth, of that of difference in Religion.

In the Fortieth, Forty first, and Forty second, of the Degrees of Consanguinity and Affinity, as well Temporal as Spiritual.

The other Sections, contain divers Questions concerning the Resurrection; the State of the Elect, and of the Reprobates after their Death; Prayers for the Dead; the Invocation and Intercession of the Saints; the Circumstances of the last Judgment; the several Degrees of Beatitude and Glory; and the State and Torments of the Damned, with which ends the Fiftieth Section of the Fourth Book, by the Master of the Sentences.

This Work was published by John Aleaume, and printed at Paris A. D. 1565. and at Lyons in 1581. It was also revis'd by Antony de Mouchy, and reprinted in the same City in 1618. and in other Places. The Author makes it his chief Business (as we have already hinted) to collect the Opinions of the Fathers concerning all the Questions discussed by him: He adds very little of his own, except sometimes in reconciling certain Passages which seem to be contradictory; and when he cannot bring them to an Agreement, he usually leaves the Question undecided. He avoids to meddle with Questions concerning which the Fathers have writ nothing, and scarce ever makes use of Philosophical Terms and Arguments, much less of Aristotle's Authority, who is often cited by the other School-men.

The Book of Sentences, by ROBERT PULLUS, is not a Collection of Passages of the Fathers, as that of Peter Lombard, but a Theological Work, in which he himself resolves certain Questions which are propos'd, either by Ratiocination, or by Proofs taken out of holy Scripture. This Author, fir-nam'd Pullus, Pullen or Pully, being an English Man by Nation, pass'd over into France, and flourish'd in the Schools of Paris. He return'd to England about the Year 1130. and there re-established the University of Oxford in 1133. He was made Arch-deacon of Rocheſter, and although he enjoy'd that Benefice, yet forbore not to go back to Paris, where he resid'd in Quality of Professor of Divinity. However, his Metropolitan thought fit to recall him, and not being prevail'd with, even upon St. Bernard's Request that he might still remain at Paris, caus'd the Revenues of his Arch-deaconry to be seiz'd on, to oblige him to return to England. Whereupon Pullus appeal'd to the See of Rome, and having much Interest in that Court, was not only vindicated against the Archbishop, but also invited to Rome by Pope Innocent II. and created Cardinal and Chancellor of the Church of Rome by Lucius II. in 1144. This Dignity was enjoy'd by him till the Third or Fifth Year of the Pontificate of Eugenius III. when he died A. D. 1150.

Cardinal Pullus's Book of Sentences is divided into Eight Parts, in the First of which he treats of the Existence of God, of the Three Persons of the Holy Trinity, and of the Divine Attributes.

In the Second, of the Creation of the World, of the Angels, of the Nature of Man, of the Origine of the Soul, of Adam's Fall, of the Corruption of human Nature, and of Original Sin.

In the Third, of the Law, of the Circumcision, of the Law of Grace, and of the Incarnation of Jesus Christ.

He continues his Discourse concerning that Mystery in the Fourth Part; where he also treats of Faith, Hope, and Charity; of Purgatory; and of the State of Souls after their Separation from their Bodies.

In the Fifth Part, he treats of the Sacraments, and of the Orders of the Church.

In the Fifth, he treats of the Resurrection of Jesus Christ, of the Gift of Faith, of the Sacraments, of Baptism, of Confirmation, of the Remission of Sins, of Charity, and of Sin.

In the Sixth Part, he discourses of the Effects of Sin; of Concupiscence; of Ignorance, and other Punishments of Sin; of the Temptations of the Devil; of the Assistance of good Angels, and their Functions; of Repentance; and of the Priest's Power of binding and loosing, and of the Use that they ought to make of it.

The same Subject is farther handled in the Seventh Part, where he also treats of the Fruits of Repentance; of Church Discipline; of Ecclesiastical and Civil Power; of the Distinction of Sacred Orders; of the Qualities of Ministers; and of Marriage.

In the Eighth Part, he treats of the Eucharist; of the last Judgment, and of the State of the Blessed and Damned Spirits.

This Author is somewhat obscure, but argues with a great deal of Judgment: His Style is not altogether rude, neither is it perplexed with Scholastical Terms and Distinctions: He does not start any Subtil and Metaphysical Questions, but only such as relate to Points of Doctrine, Discipline or Morality; neither does he resolve them by Principles of Logick or Philosophy, but by Passages of the holy Scripture, and according to the received Doctrine of the Church, and of the Fathers, which he makes use of as a firm Basis or Ground-work. He sometimes produces certain particular Opinions, which nevertheless are common to him with many of these Ancient School-men; and he is one of those who have maintain'd the fewest erroneous or dangerous Opinions. In the First Part he says, that the Father and the Son are Two Principles of the Holy Ghost; but this Expression may be taken in a good Sense, and he never asserted, that the Father and the Son were Two Principles or Essences of a distinct Substance; but Two Persons, who produced a Third by an Action, which, although really the same, may be virtually distinct. He shews, in discoursing of the Sacrament of Penance, that it does not take away the Guilt of Sin, but only remits the Punishment; and that the Priest's Absolution is a Declaration that the Penitent is absolv'd from the Guilt of his Sin, and that he is free'd from the Punishment due to it, by the Satisfaction made by him to God: An Opinion which the Author holds in common with many Ancient School-Divines. There are also found in his Book some other Opinions which are not approv'd; and amongst others, That the Union of the Word was not made with an animated Body, but with the Mafs of Flesh, of which the Body was first form'd, and afterwards the Soul: That the Torments of the Damned may be diminished: That the Devils are not as yet cast into everlasting Flames, and that they Sin'd even at the very instant of their Creation: That if the First Man had not committed Sin, those who are Damned would not have been brought forth into the World: That the Saints do not really descend on Earth in Apparitions: And that St. Benedict had a clear Knowledge of God in this World, even such as the blessed Spirits have in Heaven.

This Author is one of those who have most peremptorily affirmed, That the Souls are immediately created by God at that instant when they are united to their Bodies, and that the Angels are pure Spirits. He likewise maintains, That the inward Intention of the Minister is not necessary for the Validity of the Sacrament; that without the Love of God Sin could not be forgiven; that Infants dying without Baptism are damn'd, and that for that Reason they are not bury'd in consecrated Ground. For matter of Discipline, it may be observ'd, That Confession made to Laicks for Venial Sins, and even for Mortal ones, in case of necessity, when there was no Priest present, was in use at that time: That not only the Communion, but also Absolution, was also deny'd to Criminals condemn'd to Death: That Priests were wont to Discipline their Penitents: That Parents were prohibited to enter the Church till their Children were Baptiz'd: That it was permitted to receive, but not to exact Money, for the Administration of the Sacraments, and even for the Celebration of Mass: That Fast was usually broke at Noon, or at the Hour of *None, but that there was no Collation: That the Custom of Fasting on Fridays was observ'd, although not reputed to be of very great Antiquity, and that Saturday-Fasts were not so regularly kept: That in many Churches some repast was taken on Holy Thursday in the Evening, and that this Custom began to prevail: That Baptism, even that of Infants, was reserv'd for Solemn Days: That the Participation of the Cup in the Communion among the Laity was still in use, but seldom put in practice: And that the Belief of the corporal Assumption of the Virgin Mary was established by the Custom of the Church.

This Work, by Robert Pullus, was published by Father Marboud of the Congregation of St. Maur, illustrated with learned and curious Notes, and printed at Paris A. D. 1655. The Ecclesiastical Writers, who cite this Author, mention some other Works compos'd by him; particularly a Commentary on the Psalms of David, another on the Revelation of St. John, a Treatise of the Contempt of the World, Four Books concerning the Sentences of the Doctors, a Volume of his Lectures, and several Sermons. We have none of these Works printed; neither is it known, whether any of them be still extant in Manuscript, except certain Sermons which were in Petavius's Library.

PETER OF POITIERS made use of a more Scholastick Method than any of the above-mention'd Authors: He succeeded them in the Divinity-Chair of the Schools at Paris, and was promoted to the Dignity of Chancellor of the Church of that City, which he enjoy'd during 38 Years. He compil'd his Collection of the Sentences in the Year 1170. dedicated it to William Archbishop of Sens, and died in 1200. In Doctrinal Points, he follows the Master of the Sentences, but uses a quite different Method, as to the manner of handling the Matters: For he explains and resolves all the Questions by the Principles of Philosophy, and treats of them as a Logician, with formal Arguments, Arguments after a very dry and uncouth Manner. This Work was set forth by Father Mathoud, at the end of that of Robert Pullus. Peter of Poitiers likewise wrote certain Allegorical Commentaries on the Books of Exodus, Leviticus, and Numbers; a Commentary on the Book of Psalms; and other Works; some of which are to be found in the Libraries.

ROBERT DE MELUN liv'd at the same time, and in the end of his Life was ordain'd Bishop of Hereford A. D. 1163. His System of Divinity in Manuscript is kept in the Library of St. Victor at Paris, and often cited by Father Mathoud, in his Notes on Robert Pullus.

GAUTIER, or GAUTERIUS, a Regular Canon of St. Victor, in the end of this Century, took upon him to confute the new Method of these Divines, and compos'd a Work which he call'd, A Treatise against the Four Labyrinths of France, viz. Peter Abaelard, Gillebert de la Porrée, Peter Lombard, and Peter of Poitiers, whom he accuses of having asserted many Heresies and Errors, in treating of the ineffable Mysteries of the Holy Trinity, and of the Incarnation, according to the uncertain Scholastick Method, and Aristotle's Principles, with which they were intoxicated. There are indeed sufficient Grounds for this Censure on Three of these Authors, but he had no reason to fall foul upon Peter Lombard, whose Work is only a Collection of Passages of the Fathers, in which Aristotle is not cited: However, it must be acknowledg'd, that the Master of the Sentences, as well as the others, started a great number of Opinions that were not approv'd by the succeeding Divines, and of which the Doctors of the Faculty at Paris made a Catalogue in the Twelfth Century, under this Title, Articles in which the Master of the Sentences is not generally follow'd.

CHAP. XVI.

Of the Commentaries on the holy Scripture compos'd in the Twelfth Century, and of the Three famous Commentators, Rupert Abbot of Duyts, Hugh and Richard of St. Victor.

A New Method of commenting upon holy Scripture was likewise introduced in this Century: The Ancient Fathers, in their Commentaries on the sacred Books, were wont to explain the Text either Literally or Allegorically, in reference to the Instruction of the People; and the Ecclesiastical Authors of the Eighth and Ninth Centuries, who wrote on the Bible, only made it their Business to compile or collect divers Commentaries of the Fathers, of which they compos'd Catena's, or continued Collections of Commentaries. Some also then brought in the use of Glosses for the Explication of the Letter; but in the Century we now speak of, they began to explain holy Scripture, almost after the same manner, as they treated of Theological Matters; that is to say, according to the Principles of Logic, discussing divers subtil Questions concerning the Doctrinal Points, and producing a great number of Common Places.

This Method was follow'd by RUPERT, Abbot of Duyts near Colen, in his Commentaries on Rupert, the holy Scripture; where he proposes to treat of the Holy Trinity, and its Works, and divides them into Three Parts; the First of which is extended from the Creation of the World to the Fall of Adam; the Second, from the Fall to the Passion of Jesus Christ; and the Third, to the Day of the last Judgment: The First Period of Time is appropriated to the Father, the Second to the Son, and the Third to the Holy Ghost. The First Part contains Three Books of Commentaries on the Three first Chapters of Genesis: The Second comprehends Six other Books on the Remainder of Genesis; Four on Exodus; Two on Leviticus; as many on Numbers and Deuteronomy; One on Joshua; One on the Book of Judges; One on some Places of the Books of Kings and Psalms; One on Isaiah; One on Jeremiah; One on Ezekiel; Two Books on Daniel, Zachariah and Malachy; One Book on the History of the Macchabees; and another on some Places of the Four Gospels. The Third Part relating to the Works of the Holy Ghost, being divided into Nine Books, is not a continued Commentary on any particular Book, but on divers Passages of Scripture chosen by him, with respect to the Matters of which he design'd to treat.

The Commentaries of this Author on the 12 lesser Prophets, and on the Book of Canticles, are more continual, come nearer to the Form of Commentaries, and recede less from the manner of Writing in use among the Ancients; but they are extremely mystical, and full of too subtil Reflections, and of Remarks which have not all the Accuracy that might be expected.

The Thirteen Books of the Victory of the Word of God, contain a great Number of Questions and Common Places on divers Passages of Scripture.

The Commentaries of the Glory and Dignity of the Son of God on St. Matthew, and the Commentary on St. John's Gospel, and his Revelation, are very like those on the lesser Prophets.

The Treatise of the Glorification of the Trinity, and of the Procession of the Holy Ghost, divided into Nine Books, contains the Explication of many Passages of Scripture, that have some relation to the Questions, which he proposes concerning the Three Divine Persons, and more especially that of the Holy Ghost.

As for his Treatise of Divine Offices, it is a Work of another Nature; in which he treats of the Divine Service, and of its Ceremonies, and gives mystical Reasons of them. He there seems to start a particular Notion concerning the Eucharist, viz. That the Bread is made the Body of Jesus Christ, by the Hypostatical Union with his Soul; nevertheless some Authors have vindicated the Assertion, and affirm that it may be explain'd in a good Sense; but we shall not now examine this Question.

The most part of Rupert's Works are dedicated to Cuno Abbot of Siegburg, and afterwards Bishop of Ratisbon, to whom he was recommended by Berenger Abbot of St. Laurence at Liege, in which last Monastery Rupert sometime resided in Quality of a Monk. His Works were printed at Colen A. D. 1578. in Three Volumes, and in Two at Paris in 1638. He himself gives us a Catalogue of them, in the Preface to his Treatise of Divine Offices: He there makes mention of all those that are still extant, and we have every one of them, except his Treatise of the Glorious King David, of which he had then only compos'd Eleven Books.

St. Victor.

There are Two sorts of Commentaries on the holy Scripture that bear the Name of HUGH OF ST. VICTOR; the former are certain Literal and Historical Annotations on the Text, to which is prefix'd a Critical Preface concerning the sacred Writers, and the Books written by them: The others are Allegorical Commentaries intermix'd with a great number of Questions and Common Places. These last are call'd A Volume of Extracts, and divided into XXIV Books: The Ten first of these, which are inserted in the Second Tome of the Works of Hugh of St. Victor, contain general Remarks on the Arts and Sciences: The Nine following, which are in the first Tome, comprehend variety of Allegories and Questions relating to the Histories of the sacred Books, from the Creation of the World till the time of the Macchabees, that is to say, to all the Historical Books of the Bible: The Tenth, is a Collection of Moral Homilies on Ecclesiastes: In the Four last, are compris'd divers Questions relating to the Four Gospels. To these are annexed, to render the Work compleat, Explications of the same Nature, but more at large, on all the Epistles of St. Paul.

These XXIV Books of Commentaries are attributed by Trithemius, and several other Authors, to Richard of St. Victor; and the First Part is to be seen under his Name in a certain Manuscript very near his time, which is extant in M. Colbert's Library; some part of it is also printed among the Works of that Author. However, it is affirm'd by some Persons, that this Work cannot belong either to Hugh or to Richard, by reason that in the Chronological Table which the Author makes of the Kings of France, in the Tenth Chapter of the Tenth Book, he ends with Philip the Son of Lewes the Young, before whose Reign these Two Writers were dead. Indeed this Reason may serve to prove, that the said Work was not compos'd by Hugh of St. Victor deceased in 1142. but it is not so evident a proof to shew, that Richard is not the Author of it; because the latter not dying till the Year 1173. and Philip being born in 1165. he might joyn him with King Lewes the Young his Father. However, this very Passage makes it appear, that the Author of that Work could not have written later than the Reign of Philip Augustus; since he is the last of the Kings of France mention'd by him, and consequently the said Author flourished in the Twelfth Century. As for the Literal Notes, it cannot be doubted, that they were the Genuine Works of Hugh of St. Victor, of which the following are still extant; viz. his Preface concerning the sacred Books, and the inspired Pen-men of them; his Notes on the Pentateuch; on the Book of Judges; on the Books of the Kings; and on some Psalms. These Notes are concise, and do not recede from the Literal and Historical Sense. Those that he made on the Lamentations of Jeremiah, and on the Prophecies of Joel and Obadiah, are larger, and Allegories are intermix'd with them. To these Explications of the Books of the holy Scripture are annex'd others, which he wrote on the Book of the Hierarchy attributed to St. Dionysius the Areopagite. We might also add his Explication of the Decalogue, and those of St. Augustin's Rule, which are of the same Style.

The Four Books of the Cloister of the Soul; the Four other Books of the Soul; the small Tract of the Physick of the Soul; the Two Books of Birds; and those of the Spiritual and Carnal Marriages, belong to Hugh de Foliet, a Monk of Corby: I also ascribe to the same Monk, the Dialogue between the Flesh and the Spirit, the Style of which is different from that of Hugh of St. Victor; nay, perhaps he is the Author of the Four Books of the Mystical Ark, and of the Ark of Noah, which bear the Name of the Benedictin Monk of Saxony: Inasmuch that in the Second Tome of the Works of Hugh of St. Victor, there are but very few of his Genuine Pieces; viz. the Soliloquy of the Soul; the Encomium of Charity; the Discourse on the manner of Praying; the Discourse of the Love of the Bridegroom, and of the Spouse; the Four Books of the Vanity of the World, and the 100 Sermons.

The last Tome contains Dogmatical Works; the First of which is called Didascalick, or Instructive Institutions, being divided into Seven Books, in which are certain Rules for studying, and general Notions of the Sciences. In the Fourth, he treats of the sacred Books, of the Writings of the Fathers, and of the Councils and Canons: In the Fifth, of the Sense of the holy Scriptures: In the Sixth, of the manner of reading it; and in last, which is the largest, of the manner of attaining to the Knowledge of God, and of the Trinity, by the Creatures.

The Second, relates to the Will and Omnipotence of God; in which he examines this Question; viz. Whether his Power be of a larger extent than his Will?

The

The following Tracts are compos'd on divers Questions relating to the Mystery of the Incarnation, particularly in reference to the Will of Jesus Christ, his Wisdom and Knowledge, concerning the Union of the Word with the human Nature; against the Opinion of the Master of the Sentences, that Jesus Christ is not a Thing; and touching several other Scholastical Questions; besides Three Conferences about the Incarnation, and a Treatise of the Perpetual Virginity of the Virgin Mary.

To these Treatises are subjoin'd Five Books, call'd Miscellanies of Theological Learning, which contain many Common Places concerning Passages of the holy Scripture, and divers Points of Divinity and Morality.

The Three Books of Divine Offices, and that of the Canon of the mystical Offering, belong to Robert Paululus, a Priest of the Church of Amiens, of whom we have made mention elsewhere.

The small Tract, by way of Dialogue between Master and Scholar, concerning the Law of Nature, and the written Law, contains brief Resolutions of a great number of Theological Questions.

The Summary of the Sentences, divided into Seven Treatises, is a compendious System of Divinity.

But his chief Theological Work, is a Treatise of the Sacraments, divided into Two Books, of which the First comprehends twelve Parts, and the Second eighteen. It is one of the largest Treatises of Divinity that were compos'd in the Twelfth Century, and the Author therein explains the Questions after a very clear manner, altogether free from the Logical Method and Terms, without involving himself in the Labyrinth of obscure and intricate Speculations. He proceeds to resolve these Questions by Passages of the holy Scripture, and according to the Principles of the Fathers, more especially of St. Augustin, whose Doctrine he follows, affecting even to imitate his Style; which gave occasion to some Persons to call him, The Tongue of that Father. He was a Native of Flanders, born in the Territories of Ypres, and not in Saxony, as it was generally suppos'd: But he spent his Life in France, in the Monastery of St. Victor, of which he was a Regular Canon and Prior. He died Febr. 11. A. D. 1142. aged Forty Years. His Works were printed at Paris in 1526. at Venice in 1588. at Mentz in 1617. and at Rouen in 1648.

This Author had for his Pupil RICHARD, a Scotch Man by Nation, and a Regular Canon of the same Monastery, who likewise attain'd to the Office of Prior in the Year 1164. and acquir'd much Reputation by the great number of his Writings. We have but now observ'd, that to him may be attributed the Collection of Questions on the Bible, part of which is printed amongst his Works, and the rest among those of Hugh of St. Victor. The following Works on the holy Scripture are undoubtedly his. Viz.

St. Victor.

Three Treatises of Critical Remarks and History; that is to say, the First to explain the Form and Parts of the Tabernacle; the Second, to give a Description of Solomon's Temple, and of every Thing that was contain'd therein; and the Third, to adjust the Chronology of the Books of Kings and Chronicles, concerning the Kings of Judah and Israel. To these Treatises must be added a larger Explication of the Temple in Ezechiel. These Four Treatises relate altogether to critical Matters, and have no regard to Allegories, nor to Mystical or Moral Significations.

His other Commentaries are not of the same Nature, as not being Literal, but Allegorical, Moral or Dogmatical: They consist in Explications of divers Psalms; a Commentary on the Book of Canticles; Questions on certain difficult Passages of St. Paul's Epistles; and a large Commentary on the Apocalypse. The other Works of Richard of St. Victor are of Two Sorts; some of them being Pieces relating to Points of Doctrine, and others being Treatises of Piety and practical Divinity.

Among the former are to be reckon'd his Treatise of the Trinity, divided into Six Books: A Tract dedicated to St. Bernard, concerning the Attributes appropriated to every one of the Divine Persons: His Treatise of the Incarnation: Two Treatises of the Emmanuel, or on these Words of the Prophet Isaiah, Behold, a Virgin shall conceive, and bear a Son, and shall call his name Emmanuel; in which he proves against a certain Jew, that these Words can be interpreted of none but the Virgin Mary and Jesus Christ: A Treatise of the Power of Binding and Loosing, in which he follows the common Opinion of the School-Divines of his time, concerning the Effect of the Keys, and the Power of the Ministers: A Discourse of the Sin against the Holy Ghost: Certain Explications dedicated to St. Bernard on some difficult Places of Scripture: A Discourse to explain in what Sense the Holy Ghost is said to be the Love of the Father, and of the Son: And a Treatise of the difference between Mortal and Venial Sins.

His Works of Piety and Morality are these; viz. A Treatise of the means of rooting out Evil, and promoting Good: A Discourse on the State of the inward Man: Three Books of the Instruction of the inward Man, or of the Spiritual Exercise, upon occasion of the Dreams of Nebuchadnezzar and Daniel: A Treatise of the Preparation of the Soul for Contemplation: Five Books of the Grace of Contemplation, on the Ark which was set in the Tabernacle, with an Addition containing some Allegories on the Tabernacle: A Discourse or Meditation on the Plagues that will happen on the Day of Judgment: Another Discourse on the Day of the last Judgment: A Treatise of the Degrees of Charity: Another of the Four Degrees of fervent Charity: A Discourse of the Two Passovers, with a Sermon on the Festival of Easter: A Discourse of the Baptism of Jesus Christ: A Sermon on the Effusion of the Holy Ghost: A Tract concerning the Comparison that is made of our Saviour to the Flower, and of the Virgin Mary to the Branch: Another about the Quality of Standard of the People, attributed to Jesus Christ: And lastly, Two Discourses; viz. One concerning the difference between Abraham's Sacrifice and that of David; and the other relating to the difference between the same Sacrifice, and that of the Virgin Mary.

This Author died March 10. A. D. 1173. and his Works were printed at Paris in 1518. and in 1540. as also at Venice in 1592. at Colen in 1621. and at Rouen in 1650. He shews a great deal of subtilty in his Theological Treatises, and argues methodically with an Exactness besitting an able Logician. His Critical Pieces are very accurate for his time, but his Style is not very lofty, and upon that Account it is, that his Treatises of Piety, though full of excellent Matter, have not all the Grandeur, nor all the Energy that might be wished for.

CHAP. XVII.

Of Gratian's Collection of Canons.

ALthough many Collections of Canons, Decretals, and Passages of the Fathers, relating to the Canon-Law, were compil'd before the Twelfth Century; yet none of them was generally follow'd, or publickly taught: They were looked upon as the Work of private Persons, and the Decisions contain'd in them had no greater Authority than the Monuments out of which they were taken; whilst every one apply'd them to his particular Benefit, but none made them the subject of publick Lectures. The Collection which GRATIAN a Monk of St. Felix at Bononia, and a Native of Chiusi in Toscany, completed in the Year 1151. met with much better Success; for as soon as it appear'd, it was so favourably receiv'd, that the Canonists taught it publickly, and in a little time, a great number of Commentaries were written on that Work.

Gratian.

In the Ancient Manuscripts, and in the First Editions, it bears this Title, viz. The Concord of disagreeing Canons, and afterwards was call'd, The Book of Decrees, or simply, The Decrees. It is divided into Three Parts, the First of which contains Matters relating to the Law in general, and the Ministers of the Church, under the Name of Distinctions; the Second, divers particular Cases, upon occasion of which are debated many Questions that are call'd, The Causes; and the Third, entituled, Of the Consecration, such Matters as relate to the Divine Offices, and the Sacraments.

In the First twenty Distinctions of the First Part, he treats of the Division of the Law; of the different sorts of Laws, as well Civil as Ecclesiastical; of the Authority of the Canons, of the Councils, and of the Decretals of the Popes; of the sacred Orders; of the Qualities of Persons who ought to be ordain'd; of the Form and Ceremonies of Ordination; of the Functions and Conduct of Clergy-men; of the Power of the Pope, and of the Bishops; of the use of the Pall, and of every Thing that relates to the Ministers of the Church. This Part is divided into 101 Distinctions.

In the Second, containing Thirty six Causes, every one of which comprehends divers Questions, every Question being likewise divided into several Chapters; the Author treats of Simony; of Appeals; of Incumbents depriv'd of their Benefices; of the Quality of Witnesses and Accusers; of Elections; of the Government of Churches; of Ecclesiastical Censures; of last Wills and Testaments; of Burials; of Usury; of what ought to be observ'd with respect to *outrageous or distracted Persons; of Sentences pass'd contrary to the due Forms of Law; of Monks and Abbots, and their Rights; of those who assault Clergy-men; of Commendams; of Oaths; of War; of Heresies; of Infractions of the Canons; of Sorcerers; of Marriage, and its Impediments; of the Degrees of Consanguinity; and of Rapes. In the Thirty second Cause, he has inserted a Dissertation concerning Repentance, in Seven Sections; in which he follows the Error of some Writers of Penitentials, who do not believe Confession to be of Divine Right, or absolutely necessary for the remission of Sins.

*Furieuz.

The Third Part contains Five Distinctions, or Sections; viz. the First, concerning the Consecration of Churches, the Celebration of Mass, and the Divine Service: the Second, concerning the Eucharist; the Third, about the solemn Festivals of the Year, and the use of Images; the Fourth, about the Sacrament of Baptism, and its Ceremonies; and the Fifth, concerning Confirmation, Fasts, manual Labour, and some other Points of Discipline. Some Articles have been since added from time to time, under the Title of Palea, which is suppos'd to be the Name of the Author of these Additions, which were call'd Protopalea, or Palea.

The First Edition of this Work was printed at Mentz, A. D. 1472. and the Second at Venice, Four Years after: The Third is that of Paris in 1508. which is the First that bears the Name of Gratian; whose Text is to be found in these Editions after the same manner that it was written by him; that is to say, full of false or erroneous Quotations: For Gratian has not only cited in his Collection, the false Decretals of the Popes, and other supposititious Works, but is also often mistaken in quoting one Author, or one Council for another, or in relating Passages otherwise than they they are in the Original ; upon which account it was judged Expedient to correct the Faults of this Author. Antony de Mouchy, and Antony Contius, were the first that undertook to do it in France, in the preceding Age, and the whole Work was printed with their Notes at Antwerp in 1570. and 1573. At the same time the Pope's having consider'd the Importance of this Undertaking caus'd several Persons to be employ'd in it, in order to publish a new Edition of Gratian's Decretal, corrected, and at least clear'd of the principal Errors : They began to set about the Work under the Popedom of Pius IV. and carry'd it on under his Successor Pius V. but did not compleat it till the time of Gregory XIII. They apply'd themselves more especially, 1. To correct the Errors that had crept into the Text of Gratian, through the Negligence of the Transcribers or Printers, by revising it exactly according to the Ancient Manuscripts. 2. By substituting the Name of the true Author of the Passages cited by Gratian, in the room of that which he had set down, when it was evident that he was mistaken. 3. By observing the differencees between the genuine Text and that which is quoted by Gratian, and even correcting it in the Text of Gratian in those Places, where he only Copies out their Words.

When this Work was compleated, it appear'd at Rome in 1580, with the Approbation of Pope Gregory XIII. who prohibited it to be published after another manner. Whereupon it was soon printed according to the Copy of the Roman Edition in many Places ; viz. at Venice in 1584. at Paris in 1585. at Frankfurt in 1586 and 1590. and at Lyons in 1591. and a great number of Editions of it have been since set forth. Whilst the Roman Edition was preparing for the Press, the Famous Antonius Augustinus, Archbishop of Taragona, compos'd certain Dialogues concerning the Correction of Gratian, and afterwards made Additions to the same Edition, when he had procur'd a Copy of it. This Piece was printed at Taragona A. D. 1587. the next Year after his Death, and some time after at Paris, but it was published with much more accuracy by M. Baluzius in 1682. Antonius Augustinus discovers a vast number of Faults, Over-sights, and Errors in Gratian's Decretal, and makes many curious and very useful Remarks ; to which may be added those of M. Bulsius, which are no less judicious. But whatsoever Correction of this Work has been already, or can be made for the future, it is difficult, or rather impossible, to bring it to that perfection which is requisite for a general Collection of the Canons and Ecclesiastical Constitutions, that is to serve as it were a perpetual Standard.

However Gratian's Collection was generally receiv'd and taught in the Schools as soon as it appear'd, but within a little while after, were added to it certain new Decretals of the Popes, particularly of Alexander III. of which were made Collections like those that are found in the end of the Third General Council of Lateran, and these were likewise explain'd publicly. It is against this new Body of Law, which began to be in vogue, that Stephen de Tournay declaims, in his 251 Letter, of which we have already related the Passage, to which we desire the Reader to have recourse upon this Occasion, because it may serve as a Conclusion to what we have said in this, and in the preceding Chapters.

CHAP. XVIII.

Of the General Councils held in the Twelfth Century.

Although the Name of Oecumenical, or General Council, denotes an Assembly compos'd of Bishops of all the Churches of the World ; nevertheless the Eight first General Councils held in the Levant, chiefly consist'd in Bishops of the Eastern Churches, those of the Western being represented by the Legates of the See of Rome, who often were accompany'd with few or none of the Prelates of the Western Churches : But after the Separation of the Latin Church from the Greek, it was scarce possible any longer to hold Councils, in which the Latins and Greeks were willing to assemble together, in order to pass their Judgments in Ecclesiastical Affairs, or unanimously to make common Constitutions. Therefore the succeeding General Councils were compos'd only of a great number of Prelates of the Western Churches conven'd by the Popes, who were wont to publish Decisions conformably to the Doctrine and Discipline which the Bishops of these Councils had approv'd and confirm'd. There were Three of this Nature held at Rome in the Twelfth Century ; viz. the First under Pope Calixtus II. the Second under Innocent II. and the Third under Alexander III. We have already produc'd a Relation of the First, with the Extract of its Canons, in treating of the Investitures ; so that it remains only to give the like Account of the Second and the Third.

The Second General Council of Lateran.

The Second
General Council of Lateran.

POPE Innocent II. having obtain'd the quiet Possession of the See of Rome, by the Death of Peter of Leon, conven'd in the Month of April A. D. 1139. a Council in the Palace of Lateran, call'd, the Second General; which (as they say) was compos'd of near a Thousand Prelates, and of which Thirty Canons were published.

The First imports, That all Clergy-men, who were ordain'd by Simony, shall be depos'd from the Dignity which they have unjustly usurp'd.

The Second, That all those, who have bought or sold any Benefice, shall be depriv'd of it, and branded with Infamy; and that nothing shall be exacted for the conferring of Ecclesiastical Dignities and Livings.

The Third, That none shall entertain those who are Excommunicated by their Bishop.

The Fourth, That the Bishops, and the rest of the Clergy, shall endeavour to please God and Men, by their inward Disposition, as well as by their outward Behaviour: That they shall give occasion of Scandal to none, neither by the Colour nor Fashion of their Habits: That they shall be cloth'd after a regular and modest Manner: And that they, who neglect to observe this Rule, shall be depriv'd of their Benefices, unless they be reform'd, after having been admonish'd by their Bishops.

The Fifth, forbids the Pillaging of the Goods, or Revenues, of the Bishops after their Death.

The Sixth, ordains, That those who officiate as Sub-deacons, or have enter'd into Orders of a higher Station, if they marry, or keep Concubines, shall lose their Offices or Benefices.

The Seventh, prohibits the hearing of Mass of Priests who are marry'd, or keep Concubines; declares the Marriages of Priests to be null; and ordains, that those who have contracted it shall be divorc'd, and put to Penance.

The Eighth, regulates the same Thing, with respect to Virgins consecrated to God, if they marry.

The Ninth, forbids Regular Canons, or Monks, to study the Civil Law, or the Art of Physick, in order to make profit by the Practice of those Sciences.

The Tenth, enjoyns Laicks, who have Churches or Tithes in their Possession to restore them to the Bishops under pain of Excommunication; prohibits the conferring of Arch-deaconries or Deaneries on any Persons but Priests and Deacons; declares that those who have procur'd them without entering into Orders, shall be depriv'd of them, if they refuse to be ordain'd: And in like manner forbids the granting of them to young Men, who are not admitted into Orders, or the demising of Churches to Priests for Rent.

The Eleventh, ordains, That Priests, Clerks, Monks, Travellers, Merchants, and Country People, shall have free Liberty to come and go with Safety at all times.

The Twelfth, specifies the Days and Times when it is forbidden to make War, and exhorts the Christians to Peace.

The Thirteenth, condemns Usury and Usurers.

The Fourteenth, prohibits military Combats that were practis'd at Fairs, and ordains, that those who are mortally wounded in such Rencounters shall be depriv'd of Christian Burial; although Penance, and the Vaticum, ought not to be deny'd them.

The Fifteenth, denounces an Anathema against those who abuse a Clergy-man, or a Monk, and prohibits the Bishops to give them Absolution, except in case of necessity, till they have made an Appearance before the holy Sec. The same Canon re-establishes the right of Sanctuary for Churches and Church-yards.

The Sixteenth, is a Prohibition to lay claim to Prebends, or other Benefices, by right of Succession.

The Seventeenth, re-enforces the Laws against Marriages amongst Relations.

The Eighteenth, denounces an Anathema against Incendiaries, and declares them to be unworthy of Christian Burial; forbids to give them Absolution, till they have made Restitution for the Damage done by them; and enjoyns them for Penance to take a Journey to the holy Land, or to Spain, for the Service of the Church.

The Nineteenth, suspends for a Year, and condemns to restitution, the Archbishops or Bishops, who shall take upon them to remit the Rigour of the Punishment ordain'd in the preceeding Canon.

The Twentieth, imports, That Kings and Princes have a Power to execute Justice, in consultation with the Bishops and Archbishops: A Canon which cannot be understood but in reference to Ecclesiastical Persons.

The Twenty first, forbids to admit into Orders the Sons of Priests; unless they have led a Religious course of Life in Monasteries, or in Canonical Houses.

In the Twenty second, Priests are admonish'd not to suffer Laicks to be deceiv'd by false shews of Penance; and it is observ'd therein, that that Penitence is of none Effect, when only one Crime is repented of, without reforming the others; or when one continues to dwell in the confines of Sin, by retaining an Office or Employment that cannot be exercis'd without Sin; or when one bears

bears Malice in the Heart ; or when one refuses to give Satisfaction to an injur'd Person ; or when we do not freely forgive those who have done us an Injury ; or lastly, when an unjust War is maintain'd.

The Twenty third, is against Hereticks who condemn the Sacraments.

The Twenty fourth, forbids to exact any Thing for the holy Chrism, for the consecrated Oils, and for officiating at Burials.

The Twenty fifth, deprives those Persons of their Benefices, who receive them from the Hands of Lay-men.

The Twenty sixth, prohibits Nuns to reside in private Houses.

In the Twenty seventh, they are likewise forbidden to appear in the same Choir with Monks or Canons, in order to sing the Divine Offices.

The Twenty eighth, prohibits the Canons of Cathedral Churches, under pain of Anathema, to exclude Persons of known Piety from the Election of Bishops, and declares those Elections to be null, that they make without sending for, and advising with them.

The Twenty ninth, denounces an Anathema against Slingers and Archers.

The Thirtieth, declares to be null the Ordinations made by Peter of Leon, and other Hereticks or Schismatics.

The Third General Council of Lateran.

POPE Alexander III. conven'd in the Year 1179. a great Council at Rome, which is call'd, The Third General Council of Lateran, to reform a great number of Abuses that had crept into the Church ; to make Constitutions about Matters of Discipline ; to condemn the Albigensis, and other reputed Hereticks ; to maintain the Immunities of the Church ; and to redress many Grievances that were become very common. This Council which began to sit on the Second Day of March, was compos'd of about Three hundred Bishops, and published Twenty seven Capitularies, or Articles of Canons.

The First, is a Decree for preventing the Schisms of the Church of Rome in the Election of the Popes, ordaining, That if all the Cardinals cannot agree to chuse the same Person, he shall be esteem'd as Lawful Pope, who shall obtain Two thirds of their Suffrages in his Favour ; but that he cannot be ordain'd, or acknowledg'd as such, who has less than Two thirds of the Votes : Provided nevertheless that this Constitution shall not be prejudicial to the Custom of other Chapters, in which the Consent of the greater and sounder Part usually prevails ; by reason that the Contentions which arise in those Bodies, may be determin'd by the Judgment of the Higher Powers, whereas the Church of Rome cannot have recourse to any Tribunal that is Superior to it.

The Second, declares to be null the Ordinations made by the Three Anti-popes, Octavian, Guy, and John de Struma ; deprives those of Benefices who receiv'd them from their Hands ; abrogates the Alienations of Church-Revenues made by the said Anti-popes ; and suspends from Orders those Clergy-men, who took an Oath to maintain the Schism.

The Third ordains, That a Person nominated to be chosen Bishop shall be Thirty Years old ; that he shall be born in Lawful Wedlock, and noted for his Learning, and the probity of his Manners : That when his Election is confirm'd ; when he has taken Possession of the Revenues of his Church ; and when the time prescrib'd by the Canons for his Ordination is expir'd ; he who had a right to dispose of the Benefices, which he enjoy'd before he was made Bishop, shall have free Liberty to confer them : That the Deaneries, Arch-deaconries, Curacies, and other Church-Livings, with the Cure of Souls, shall be granted only to those who have attain'd to the Age of Twenty five Years : That they who are advanced to a higher Dignity, if they do not cause themselves to be ordain'd in due time, shall be depriv'd of their Benefices, without a possibility of re-instituting themselves by virtue of an Appeal. It is also declar'd, that this Constitution shall be observ'd not only with respect to those who shall receive induction to Benefices for the future, but also in reference to Incumbents, if the Canons require it : That those who neglect to observe it in carrying on their Elections, shall be depriv'd of their Right of Electing, and even of their Benefices for Three Years : And lastly, if the Bishop infringe it, or consent to the Infringement of it, he shall lose the Right of conferring Spiritual Livings ; which shall be granted by the Chapter, or by the Metropolitan.

The Fourth Constitution, regulates the Number of Horses which the Prelates may keep for their Equipage, during the Visitation of their Diocesses ; that is to say, Forty or Fifty are allow'd to Archbishops ; Twenty five to Cardinals ; Twenty or Thirty to Bishops ; Five or Seven to Arch-deacons, and Two to Deans : Now in regard that this Number is very considerable, it is declar'd in the end of the Canon, that what is granted by way of toleration, ought only to be put in execution in Churches which have large Revenues, and that in those Places where the Ecclesiastical Revenues are very mean, the Superiors shall take care not to over-burden their Inferiors in visiting them ; and that it is not the meaning of the Decree, to enlarge the Privilege of those, who were not accusom'd to have so great a Retinue. The Bishops are likewise forbidden to oppress the inferior Clergy with Taxes and Impositions, although they are permitted upon urgent Occasions to demand of them necessary Supplies : But the Arch-deacons and Deans are absolutely prohibited to lay any Taxes upon the Priests or Clerks of their Jurisdiction.

Deans

The Sixth, regulates the Formalities of Ecclesiastical Judicature, in which are observ'd Two common Abuses, viz. One, that the Superior Clergy, fearing lest the Inferior should withdraw themselves from their Jurisdiction by an Appeal, frequently begin with Suspending or Excommunicating them, without having sent them any Monitory before; and the other, that the Inferior, on the contrary, who fear the Censure of their Superiors, appeal without having receiv'd any Wrong, and to maintain their unjust Practicē, make use of the Remedy appointed for the Relief of the Innocent. Therefore to prevent these Abuses, it is ordain'd, That the Superiors shall pronounce no Sentence of Suspension or of Excommunication against the Inferior Clergy, unless it were preceded by a Canonical Monition; if the Crime of which they are guilty be not of the Number of those, that render the Persons ipso facto excommunicated or suspended; and the Inferior are forbidden to enter an Appeal, before Issue be joyn'd: As for those, who make a Lawful Appeal, it is decreed, that a competent Time shall be allow'd them to prosecute it, and that in case they neglect to do it, within the limited Time, the Bishop, after the expiration of that Term, may make use of his Authority: Lastly, that if the Party summoned present himself in Court, and the Appellant does not appear, the latter shall be oblig'd to re-emburse the former all his Charges. It is also requir'd, that this Ordinance be regularly observ'd, more especially in Monasteries, and with respect to Religious Persons.

The Seventh, condemns the Abuses which passed into a Custom, of exacting Money for Induction to Benefices; for the Burial of the Dead; for the Benediction of Marriages, and for the Administration of the Sacraments. The Bishops are likewise forbidden to impose new Duties on the Churches, to augment the old Ones, and to appropriate any part of their Revenues to their own private use, and they are enjoy'd to maintain the Liberty of their Churches.

The Eighth, prohibits to bestow, or even to promise, Spiritual Livings, before they become vacant; ordains Parsons to make their Presentations within Six Months after the Vacancy; and grants to the Chapter the Right of nominating to such Benefices, as are too long left Vacant by the Bishop, when they are in his Gift; also to the Bishop, the like Right of nominating to those that ought to be conferr'd by the Chapter, upon the same Default: But if both Parties neglect to do it, the Right is declar'd to devolve on the Metropolitan.

The Ninth, reforms the Abuses that prevail'd under colour of Privileges granted to the Knights Templars, and other Religious Societies, who by virtue of these Privileges attempted many Things against the Authority of the Bishops: For they receiv'd Churches from the Hands of Laicks; admitted excommunicated Persons to the Participation of the holy Sacraments; allow'd them Christian Burial; placed and displaced Priests in several Churches by their own Arbitrary Power, and without acquainting the Bishops; frequently celebrated Divine Service in Churches that lay under a Suspension; and weaken'd the Episcopal Authority by Combinations and Fraternities. To put a stop to the career of these Abuses, the Council prohibits all Privileged People to entertain excommunicated Persons; enjoins them to present to the Bishops those Priests whom they would have put in the Churches, which do not by undoubted Right belong to their Jurisdiction; and that these Priests shall give an Account of their Spiritualities to the Bishops, and of their Temporalities to the Religious Society on whom they depend; so that these Benefices cannot be taken from them without the consent of the Bishops. It is also farther declared, that if the Knights Templars come into Places lying under a Suspension, they shall only have Liberty to perform Divine Service once in them; and that the Members of their Society shall not be exempted from the Jurisdiction of the Bishops. This Regulation is extended to all the other Societies, that enjoy any Privileges, and make an ill Use of them.

The Tenth imports, That Money shall not be exacted for the admitting of Monks into Monasteries; that they shall not be suffer'd to have any Personal Estate; that they shall not live privately in Towns, Villages, or Parishes, but in large Convents; that they shall not go out of them alone; that the Monks, who give any Thing for their Entrance into a Monastery, shall not be advanced to Sacred Orders; and that they who exact any thing upon that account, shall be depos'd from their Office; that he who enjoys private Possessions, unless they were given him by the Abbot for his Office, shall be excommunicated; that an Abbot, who neglects to put this Order in execution, shall be degraded from his Dignity; that Priors, or Commissions, shall not be given for Money; that Conventual Priors shall not be chang'd, unless for a just Cause, as in the Case of Dilapidation, or Irregularity, or if it be judg'd expedient to remove them to higher Station.

The Eleventh, renews the Prohibitions so often reiterated with respect to Clergy-men who are in Orders, to keep Company with Women; condemns Sodomites to very severe Punishments; and forbids Ecclesiastical Persons to frequent the Monasteries of Nuns, unless upon some emergent Occasion.

The Twelfth, forbids all Clerks, who are maintain'd by Church-Revenues, to exercise the Functions of Attorneys or Solicitors in Law-suits, unless it be to manage their own Affairs; or those of the Churches, or those of the Poor, who are not able to defend themselves. They are also prohibited in this Canon, to serve as Receivers or Judges to Lay-Lords, under the Penalty of being suspended from the Exercise of their Ministerial Functions. The same Thing is likewise more rigorously forbidden to Monks.

The Thirteenth, enforces a Prohibition to the same Person to possess several Benefices, with the Cure of Souls, and ordains residence therein.

The Fourteenth, in like manner, prohibits the Plurality of Prebends, and condemns the Proceedings of Laicks, who put Clergy-men in the Churches, and turn them out whenever they think fit; who take upon them to distribute the Goods and Revenues of the Church at their Pleasure; and who exact Duties, and lay Taxes on the Churches, and on Ecclesiastical Persons. Therefore they who persist in such Practices for the future, are threaten'd to be anathematiz'd; and the Priests and Clerks, who receive Benefices from the Hands of Lay-men, to be depos'd: The latter are also forbidden, under pain of Excommunication, to summon Clergy-men before their Judges; and it is decree'd, that they who retain the Tithes, and other Church-Revenues, shall be depriv'd of Christian Burial.

The Fifteenth ordains, That the Estate or Goods which Clergy-men have got out of the Revenue of their Benefices, shall be left to the Churches to which they belong, whether they have so dispos'd of them by their last Will and Testament or not. By this Canon is also abolished the Custom of Deans commissioned by the Bishops to exercise Episcopal Jurisdiction, who upon that account exact a certain Sum of Money.

The Sixteenth determines, That in Chapters, affairs shall be transacted according to the Advice of the greater, and more sound part of the Canons.

The Seventeenth, provides a Remedy for the Inconvenience that happens, when the Lay Patrons are divided, and present several Clerks for the same Church. It is ordain'd, That he shall be preferr'd who is the most worthy, and has the greatest Number of Suffrages.

The Eighteenth, orders the Settlement of a School-master in all the Cathedral Churches, for the Instruction of Youth, to whom is to be allotted a Benefice of a sufficient Revenue for his Maintenance; in consideration of which, he is forbidden to exact any Thing for granting a License to teach, and oblig'd to deny it to those who are not capable of performing that Employment.

The Nineteenth prohibits, under the Penalty of an Anathema, the Taxes and Impositions laid by Magistrates on the Churches, and Ecclesiastical Persons; at least unless the Bishops and the rest of the Clergy, having regard to the Exigencies of the State, especially when the Revenues of the Laity are not sufficient for the discharging of them, shall judge it expedient that the Churches should contribute somewhat to that purpose.

The Twentieth, condemns the Tournaments, in which Soldiers fight, and often kill one another, to shew their Courage and Dexterity.

The Twenty first prescribes, under pain of Excommunication, the observing of a Truce, that is to say, of a Cessation of all manner of Acts of Hostility, from Wednesday-Evening at Sun-set to Monday-Morning, from Advent to the Octave after the Epiphany, and from Septuagesima till the Octave after Easter.

The Twenty second ordains, That Monks, Clerks, Pilgrims, Merchants and Peasants, who come and go to manage the Affairs of Husbandry, shall pass on the Roads with Safety, and that no new Tolls shall be exacted of them.

The Twenty third, grants to Lepers, who are sufficiently numerous for the keeping of a Church, a Church-yard, and a Priest, a License to that purpose, upon Condition that they do no Injury to the Ancient Churches, as to their Parochial Rights.

The Twenty fourth, forbids Christians to furnish the Saracens with Iron, Arms, Ship-tackle, or other Instruments of War, and excommunicates those who list themselves in their Service at Sea, as also such Persons as seize on the Goods of those that have suffer'd Shipwreck.

The Twenty fifth ordains, That Publick Usurers shall be depriv'd of the Communion during their Life-time; and of Christian Burial after their Death.

The Twenty sixth declares, That it ought not to be endur'd that the Saracens should have Christian Slaves, nor that the Christians should reside among them. It gives permission to receive the Testimony of Christians against the Saracens, and ordains that those who are converted to the Christian Religion, shall remain in the quiet Possession of the Estates which they enjoy'd before.

The Twenty seventh Canon is that which relates to the Albigensis, and others, who were reputed Hereticks in those Times, of which we have already given some Account elsewhere.

These are all the Regulations that were made in the Third General Council of Lateran. Bartholomew Laurens, sir-nam'd Poin, who published the Acts of this same Council, has annexed to it a large Collection of divers Constitutions of Alexander III. and of the Popes who preceded or succeeded him, which he looked upon at least in part, as a Sequel of this Council, because he found it in the same Manuscript: But this Work does not in any manner belong to the Council, and ought not to be esteem'd as a part of it; so that we shall take no farther Notice of it in this Place.

C H A P. XIX.

Of the Provincial Councils held in the Twelfth Century.

WE shall only treat in this Chapter of those Councils which made Regulations of the Church-Discipline, or that determin'd any important Ecclesiastical Affairs, and we shall pass by in silence a very great Number of lesser Councils, which were held only to re-establish or confirm the Privileges of particular Churches and Monasteries; or to consecrate certain Churches; or to translate the Relicks of Saints; or to pass Judgment concerning the Differences between Churches and private Persons about Temporalities; or lastly, to condemn or to acquit some Persons accused of Crimes.

The Council of Valence held in the Year 1100.

The Council of Valence, A.D. 1100.

IN the Year 1100. John and Benedict the Pope's Legates, arriv'd in France, and call'd a Council at Autun, which was held in the Month of September at Valence. It was compos'd of Twenty four Prelates, as well Archbishops as Bishops and Abbots, and the Deputies of the Archbishop of Lyons assisted therein. The Canons of Autun accus'd their Bishop of Simony, and the Matter was warmly debated on all sides, but the Determination of it was refer'd to the Council of Poitiers. Hugh Abbot of Flavigny, who was turn'd out by the Monks, obtain'd Letters of Restauration in this Council of Valence.

The Council of Poitiers held in the Year 1100.

The Council of Poitiers in 1100.

THIS Council was assembled on the Octave of St. Martin in the same Year. The Bishop of Autun, not having sufficiently clear'd himself of the Accusation brought against him, was depos'd and excommunicated, notwithstanding his Appeal to the Pope in this Council, and in the preceding: For the Legates had declar'd, that no regard ought to be had to that Appeal, since they were invested with the whole plenitude of the Pontifical Power. This Council was compos'd of Eighty Dignitaries, as well Bishops as Abbots, and in it was pronounced a solemn Excommunication against King Philip for retaking Bertrade. The Abbot of St. Remy at Rheims was confirm'd in his Abbey; the Case of Drogo, Treasurer of the Church of Châlons, was argu'd, and it was made to appear, that he could not possess that Benefice, having another in another Diocese: Lastly, a certain Church was adjudg'd to Ives Bishop of Chartres, which had been usurped from him, and Sixteen Canons were made in this Council.

The first imports, That only the Bishops or Abbots shall be empower'd to administer Clerical Tonsure to the Monks, that is to say, to engage them in the Monastick Life by vertue of that Ceremony, and that they ought only to confer it on those Persons who actually turn Monks.

The Second, That nothing shall be exacted upon account of such Tonsure, nay not so much as for the Sizzers and Napkins that are us'd in performing the Ceremony.

The Third ordains, That Clerks shall not do Homage to Lay-men, and shall not receive Church-Livings from their Hands.

The Fourth, That the Benediction of the Sacerdotal Habits, and of the Utensils belonging to the Altar, shall be reserv'd to the Bishop.

The Fifth, That the Monks shall not be allow'd to wear the Maniple, unless they exercise the Office of Sub-deacons.

The Sixth, That the Abbots shall not make use of Gantlets and Sandals, nor of the Ring, in officiating, unless they have obtain'd a Privilege from the See of Rome.

The Seventh, That Prebends shall neither be bought nor sold, and that no Household-Provisions shall be exacted for the conferring of them.

The Eighth, That no Prebends, nor any other Benefices, shall be dispos'd of during the Lifetime of the Incumbents.

The Ninth, That the Clerks and Monks shall not buy any Altars or Tithes of the Laicks.

The Tenth declares, That the Regular Canons may Baptize, Preach, enjoyn Penance, and Bury the Dead, with a Licence from the Bishop.

The Eleventh, That the Exercise of these Functions is forbidden to Monks.

The Twelfth ordains, That those Clerks, who carry about Relicks to get Money by them, shall not be suffer'd to preach.

The

The Thirteenth, That the Archbishops shall not exact of the Bishops, nor the Bishops of the Abbots, any Copes, Carpets, Balons, or Napkins, for their Consecration.

The Fourteenth, That Laicks shall have no share in the Offerings made at the Altar, nor in the Gratuities allow'd to the Priests, especially upon the account of Burials.

The Fifteenth, That no authorized Judges shall seize on the Revenues of the Bishops, either in their Life-time, or after their Death.

The Sixteenth, and last Canon, confirms every Thing that Pope Urban had ordain'd in the Council of Clermont; particularly concerning Tithes and Altars unjustly retain'd by Laicks, as also concerning the Celebacy of Priests, Deacons, Sub-deacons, and Canons, and the Prohibition to hold Two Prebends, or Two Dignities in Two several Churches. Moreover it is related in a certain Ancient Chronicle, that this Council ordain'd, that the Bishops should have a Right to recover their Possessions.

King Philip, to cause the Excommunication which was denounced against him in the Council of Poitiers to be taken off, wrote to the Pope, that he was ready for the future, not to have to do carnally with Bertrade. Whereupon the Pope referr'd the Management of that Affair to Richard Bishop of Albano his Legate, who held at Besugency a Council of the Bishops of the Provinces of Rheims and Sens, in which the King and Bertrade took an Oath upon the Holy Gospels, that they would no longer have carnal Copulation together, and that they would not see one another, but in the presence of such Persons as could not be suspected, till they had obtain'd a Dispensation from the Pope. However the Bishops and the Legate durst not give them Absolution; but reserv'd the Determination of the Matter to the Pope: Afterwards Richard being departed from France, the Pope granted a Commission for that purpose to Lambert Bishop of Arras, with the Archbishops and Bishops of the Provinces of Rheims, Sens and Tours, whom he empower'd to absolve the King, in case he renounced his unchast Correspondence with Bertrade, and engag'd no longer to see her, unless it were in the presence of unsuspected Persons. At last, Lambert Bishop of Arras, Diambert Archbishop of Sens, Radulphus Archbishop of Tours, and many of their Suffragans, being conven'd at Paris A. D. 1105. receiv'd the Oaths of the King, and of Bertrade, conformably to the Tenor of the Pope's Letter, and gave them Absolution upon those Conditions.

The Council of Anse.

IN the Year 1100. the Archbishops of Canterbury, Lyons, Tours, and Bourges, and Eight Bishops, assembled at Anse near Lyons, held a Council, in which they debated Matters relating to the Voyage to the Holy Land, and excommunicated all those Persons, who had taken upon them the Crois, but had not made the Journey, till they should perform their Vow.

The Council of Anse in 1100.

The Council of Troyes.

RICHARD Bishop of Albano, Legate of the See of Rome, held a numerous Council at Troyes in Champagne A. D. 1104. in which Godfrey was choien Bishop of Amiens, and Hubert Bishop of Senlis accused of Simony clear'd himself by Oath: This Council approv'd of, and confirm'd the Privileges of the Monasteries of the Church of St. Peter at Troyes, and of the Abbey of Moleme.

The Council of Troyes in 1104.

The Council of Beauvais held in the Year 1114.

GODFREY, who was ordain'd Bishop of Amiens in the preceding Council, being ill us'd in that Country, took a Resolution to quit his Bishoprick; insomuch that in the Year 1114. Conon, the Pope's Legate, having call'd a Council at Beauvais, the People of Amiens demanded another Bishop, and Godfrey's Letter was read, in which he declar'd, that he had renounced his Bishoprick. The Council, that nothing might be done with precipitation, reserv'd that Affair to be determined in the Council of Soissons. However they made a Constitution, in which it was declar'd, That the Revenues, of which the Churches had a quiet Possession during a Year and a Day, should belong to them for ever; provided that this Possession should take Place only against Lay-men, and that a Possession of Thirty Years shall be requisite to transfer a Right from one Church to another.

The Council of Toulouse held in the Year 1119.

The Council of Toulouse in 1119.

POPE Calixtus II. being arriv'd in France, held June 6. A. D. 1119. a Council at Toulouse. compos'd of certain Cardinals, and of the Archbishops and Bishops of Aquitaine, in which he published Ten Canons.

The First, is against those who buy or sell Spiritual Livings.

The Second imports, That no Man shall be made a Provost, Arch-Priest, or Dean, who is not a Priest; nor an Arch-deacon, who is not a Deacon.

The Third ordains, That Hereticks, who condemn the Communion of the Body and Blood of Jesus Christ, the Baptism of Infants, Holy Orders, and Lawful Wedlock, shall be excommunicated, and that the same Punishment shall be inflicted on their Adherents.

The Fourth, forbids Princes and Lay-men to possess Tithes, Oblations, Monasteries, or other Revenues belonging to the Churches.

The Fifth, prohibits to make Slaves of Free-men.

The Sixth ordains, That Clergy-men shall not be oblig'd to perform any manner of Service to Laicks for Church-Revenues.

The Seventh, That none shall seize on the Fourth Part of the Offerings which belong to the Bishop.

The Eighth, That neither Bishops, nor Priests, nor any other Ecclesiastical Persons, shall be permitted to leave their Benefices to their Heirs, as an Inheritance by Right of Succession.

The Ninth, That nothing shall be exacted for the consecrated Oyls, Holy Chrism, or the Burial of the Dead.

The Tenth, That the Monks, Canons, or Clerks, who quit their Profession, shall be Excommunicated.

The Council of London held in the Year 1125.

The Council of London in 1125.

IN the Year of our Lord 1125. John de Crema, Legate of the See of Rome, William Archbishop of Canterbury, Turstin Archbishop of York, Twenty Bishops, and about Forty Abbots, assembled at London, made Seventeen Decrees, in which they prohibit Simony; to give or to receive any Thing for Ordinations; to receive a Spiritual Living from the Hands of Laicks; to chuse a Successor to such Livings; to confer them on Persons who are not in Orders; to deprive a Clergy-man of a Benefice without a Legal Sentence passed against him by his Bishop; to ordain One who belongs to another's Diocess; to entertain One who has been excommunicated by his Bishop. Clerks are likewise forbidden to cohabit with strange Women, and to follow Usury; Witchcraft is condemned; and Marriages are prohibited between Relations to the seventh Degree; but it is declar'd, that Husbands, who endeavour to get their Wives divorced, under pretence of Consanguinity, are not allow'd to make proof of it by Witnesses.

The Council of London held in the Year 1127.

The Council of London in 1127.

WILLIAM Archbishop of Canterbury held another Council at London Two Years after the former, in which he renew'd the most part of those Constitutions, adding some others against the Plurality of Benefices, also concerning the Restitution of Tithes, and the Plainness that ought to be observ'd by the Abbesses in their Habits and Attire.

The Council of London held in the Year 1138.

The Council of London in 1138.

PART of the same Constitutions were reviv'd in the Council held at London, A. D. 1138. during the Vacancy of the See of Canterbury, by Alberic Cardinal Bishop of Ostia, the Pope's Legate in England. This Council was compos'd of Eighteen Bishops, and about Thirty Abbots, and in it were published Seventeen Canons; of which the following are not comprehended in the preceding Councils: viz. The Second, which forbids the keeping of the consecrated Elements in the Eucharist above Eight Days, and ordains, that they shall be reverently carry'd to the Sick by the Priests or Deacons, and even by Lay-men, in Case of Necessity: The Fourth, which prohibits a Bishop, who is sent for by another Bishop to consecrate a Church, to exact any Thing besides his Right of Procuracion: The Tenth, in which is referr'd to the Pope the giving of Absolution to those who have misus'd Priests, or Persons consecrated to God: The Twelfth, being a Prohibition to build a Chappel without a Licence from the Bishop: The Thirteenth, in which Church-men are forbidden to engage in Warlike Affairs, and to bear Arms: The Fourteenth, prohibiting hibiting Monks to quit their Profession: The Fifteenth, which forbids Abbeſſes to be artir'd, and to have their Heads dreſſed after the manner of Secular Women: And the Seventeenth, which imports, That School-maſters ſhall not be permitted to let out their Schools to others for Money. Laſtly, Theobald Abbot of Bec, was choſen Archbiſhop of Canterbury in this Council, and divers means were treated of for the making Peace between the Kings of England and France.

The Council of Rheims held in the Year 1131.

Pope Innocent II. as it has already been declar'd, held a Council at Rheims, A. D. 1131. in which he Crown'd Lewis ſirnam'd the Young, King of France, and publiſhed Seventeen Canons very advantageous to the Church, but ſince they are recited in the Second General Council of Lateran, it were needleſs to produce an Extract of them in this Place.

The Council of Rheims in 1131.

The Council of Rheims held in the Year 1148.

This Council conven'd by Pope Eugenius III. March 22. A. D. 1148. publiſhed Eighteen Canons, which are all among thoſe of the Second General Council of Lateran. We have already given an Account of the Tranſactions therein, relating to the Condemnation of Gillebert de la Porrée.

The Council of Rheims in 1148.

The Council of Tours held in the Year 1163.

This Council held at Tours by Pope Alexander III. on the 28. Day of April, was compos'd of Seventeen Cardinals, 127 Biſhops, and of a very great Number of Abbots, and other Eccleſiaſtical Perſons. Arnulphus, Biſhop of Liſieux, made an excellent Diſcourſe before mention'd; Alexander renew'd his Bulls of Excommunication againſt Oſtavian, and the Ten following Canons were publiſh'd.

The Council of Tours in 1163.

The Second, condemns Uſury, more eſpecially that by virtue of which the Intereſt of Things left in pawn by poor People, amounts to a greater Sum than the Principal.

In the Third, Clergy-men are forbidden to beſtow Churches, Tithes, or Offerings on Laicks.

The Fourth, is againſt the Albigensis, which we have already recited in diſcourſing of thoſe People.

The Fifth, prohibits the letting out of Churches to Priests for an Annuity or yearly Rent.

The Sixth, forbids the exacting of any Thing for admiſſion into Orders; for Nominations to Benefices; for the Burial of the Dead; for the Holy Chriſm; and for the conſecrated Oils.

The Seventh, is a Prohibition to Biſhops to grant Commiſſions to Deans, or to Arch-Priests, for the carrying on of Judiciary Proceedings in their room, or inſtead of Arch-deacons.

By the Eighth, Monks are forbidden to go out of their Cloiſters in order to ſtudy, or to become Profeſſors of the Civil Law, or to praſtiſe Phyſick.

The Ninth, declares the Ordinations made by Oſtavian, and by the other Schiſmaticks or Hereticks, to be void and of none Effect.

The Tenth, propoſes new Methods for maintaining the Revenues and Liberty of the Churches, and ordains, That whenever the Chaplains, who reſide in the Caſtles, perceive any Injury to be done the Church, they ſhall make an Addreſs to the Lord of the Caſtle, to demand Reſtitution; and if he neglect to do it within the ſpace of Eight Days, the Celebration of the Divine Offices ſhall be ſuſpended in the Caſtle; except that of Baptiſm, Confeſſion, and the Communion, in caſe of Danger of Death: Only it is permitted to ſay Maſs privately once a Week in a neighbouring Village, to conſecrate the Hoſt: It is added, That if the Inhabitants of the Caſtles continue in their obſtinacy Forty Days, the Chaplains ſhall abſolutely abandon the Place. They are alſo order'd to retire in Three Months, if they be charg'd with any manner of Servcies, and enjoyn'd to get Information when the Booty is brought in; whether any of it belong to the Churches, or be claimed by Clergy-men: All the Vicars and Chaplains are requir'd to take an Oath to obſerve theſe Injunctions.

By this Canon, the Inn-keepers and Inhabitants of Towns or Villages, are forbidden to entertain excommunicated Perſons: Church-yards and Eccleſiaſtical Revenues are exempted from all manner of Rent-charges and Aſſeſſments: The Excommunication to be inflicted on thoſe who miſuſe Clergy-men is reviv'd, with a Reſervation of that Cauſe to the See of Rome. All manner of Converſe or Correſpondence is prohibited with Perſons who lie under a Sentence of Excommunication: The Deans are enjoyn'd to take care that theſe Ordinances be duly put in execution, and to give notice to the Biſhop or Arch-deacon, of the Treſpaſſes that ſhall be committed upon them. The Abbots, Monks, Priors, Abbeſſes and Prioreſſes, are likewiſe free'd from all manner of Rent-charges, and and Impositions. Lastly, an Anathema is denounced against Clergy-men and Laicks, who shall presume to buy or to sell any Revenues or Possessions, which they know to belong to the Church.

The Council of Cassel in Ireland.

The Council of Cassel in Ireland, held A.D. 1172. IN the Year of our Lord 1172. Henry II. King of England, having made himself Master of Ireland, call'd a Council at Cassel, compos'd of the Prelates and other Clergy of Ireland, in which the following Canons were established.

The First imports, That all the Faithful in Ireland shall be oblig'd not to inter-marry with their near Relations, but to contract Lawful Marriages.

The Second, That all the Children shall be made Catechumens at the Church-door, and shall be baptized in the Church.

The Third, That all the Faithful shall pay to their respective Parish-Churches Tithes, as well of Cattel, and of the Fruits of the Earth, as of their other Revenues.

The Fourth, That all the Church-Revenues shall be exempted from all manner of Taxes and Impositions.

The Fifth, That when a certain Sum is made up, that is to say, stipulated or agreed to be paid for the Murder of a Person; the Clergy-men, who are the Heirs of the deceased Party, shall not be oblig'd to pay any part of the Fine.

The Sixth, That all the Faithful when fain Sick shall make their last Will and Testament in the presence of their Confessor; and that they, who have a Wife and Children, shall divide their movable Goods into Three Parts; One of which shall be allotted to the Wife, another to the Children, and the Third for the Funeral Expences: That if they have no Children, they shall leave one Moiety of their Goods to their Wives; and if they have no Wife, their Children shall have a Moiety.

 A sort of Service for the Dead.* The Seventh, That a Mass and * Vigils shall be said for those who die after having made Confession, and that the accustomed Duties shall be paid to them.

The Eighth, That Divine Service shall be celebrated in all the Churches, according to the Rites and Customs of the Church of England.

The Council of Avranches held in the Year 1172.

The Council of Avranches in 1172. THirteen Canons were published in the Council which was held at Avranches A. D. 1172. by the Cardinals Theoduin and Albert, for the giving of Absolution to Henry II. King of England.

The First, forbids the conferring of Benefices with the Cure of Souls on Children.

The Second, is a Prohibition to bestow on the Sons of Priests, the Churches that were possessed by their Fathers..

The Third, is likewise a Prohibition to give part of the Offerings to Laicks.

The Fourth, prohibits the appointing of Churches to be serv'd by annual Vicars.

The Fifth, obliges the Curates of large Parishes to provide a Vicar, when they have means to do it.

By the Sixth, the Ordination of Priests without a Title is prohibited.

The Seventh, forbids the letting out of Churches to farm for a Year.

The Eighth, prohibits the depriving the Priests, who perform their Functions therein, of a third Part of the Tithes belonging to them.

The Ninth, grants a Licence to those Persons, who are in possession of Tithes, to bestow them on such Clerks as they shall think fit, on condition that they shall afterwards return to the Church to which they belong of very good Right.

The Tenth, forbids a Husband to turn Monk, whilst his Wife remains in the Secular State; unless they be both too old to get any Children: The same Thing is forbidden with respect to the Wife.

The Eleventh, advises Fasting and Abstinence during the time of Advent.

The Twelfth, prohibits the placing of Clergy-men as Judges in the Civil Courts of Judicature.

The Thirteenth, determines nothing as to the Estates of excommunicated Persons; the Perquisites claimed for the Benedictions of Marriages and Baptism; and for the giving of Absolution to those who lye under a Sentence of Excommunication; by reason that the Bishops of Normandy refused to admit that Decree.

The Council of London held in the Year 1175.

THE Two Henries, Kings of England, being arriv'd at London, met with Richard Archbishop of Canterbury, and the rest of the Prelates of the Realm, who held a Council on the Sunday preceding the Festival of the Ascension, in which the Archbishop Richard published the following Nineteen Canons. The Council of London in 1175.

The First ordains, That they who have enter'd into Holy Orders, and keep a Concubine, whom they refuse to expel, shall be depriv'd of all manner of Ecclesiastical Office and Benefice: That the Clerks who are in Orders, below the Degree of a Sub-deacon, and are married, shall not be divorced from their Wives; but shall no longer enjoy their Spiritual Livings: That they who are Sub-deacons, or in superior Orders, and contract Marriage, shall be compell'd to part with their Wives: And lastly, That the Sons of Priests shall be incapable to succeed their Fathers in the Churches possessed by them.

The Second, forbids Clergy-men to enter Victualling Houses, to eat or to drink there, except when they are travelling on the Road.

By the Third, Clerks, who are in Orders, are forbidden to assist at Tryals in Capital Cases.

The Fourth ordains, That the Arch-deacon shall oblige those Clergy-men who wear long Locks of Hair to cut them off, and that they shall be cloath'd modestly.

By the Fifth, Bishops are prohibited to ordain the Clergy of another Diocess, by reason of the Inconveniences that may arise from that Practice.

The Sixth, forbids the Tryal of Criminals to be manag'd in Churches, or in Church-yards.

The Seventh and Eighth, renew the Prohibitions to exact any Thing for the Administration of the Sacraments; for the burying of the Dead; or for admittance into Orders, or the Monastick State.

The Ninth, in like manner, forbids the making over of Churches to any Person under Pretence of endowing them; as also the exacting of any Thing for the Presentation to a Benefice.

The Tenth, prohibits Religious Persons to follow the Trade of Merchandizing, or to be Farmers, and likewise Lay-men to take Spiritual Livings to farm.

By the Eleventh, Clergy-men are prohibited to bear Arms.

The Twelfth imports, That the Vicars who endeavour to retain the Benefices of those who have the Title, contrary to their Promise or Engagement, shall be no longer suffer'd to exercise their Functions in the same Diocess.

The Thirteenth ordains, That Tithes shall be paid of all Things.

The Tenor of the Fourteenth is, That a Clergy-man, who is cast in his Tryal, ought to be condemn'd to defray the Charges of it; and that if he has not wherewithal to pay, he shall be punish'd according to the Bishop's Discretion.

The Fifteenth ordains, That there shall be only Ten particular Prefaces, for the Festivals which are specified in that Canon.

The Sixteenth, prohibits the administering of the consecrated Bread in the Communion steeped in Wine.

The Seventeenth, forbids the Consecration of the Eucharist any otherwise than in a Gold or Silver-Chalice, and abolishes the Use of Tin-Chalices.

By virtue of the Eighteenth, clandestine Marriages are forbidden.

The Nineteenth, is a Prohibition to marry Children, who have not attain'd to a competent Age of maturity, unless it be in case of Necessity, or for the promoting of Peace.

The Synod of York held in the Year 1195.

HUBERT Archbishop of Canterbury, and the Pope's Legate in England, held at York a Synod of the Clergy of that Church in the Month of June, A. D. 1195. in which, after having depos'd Robert Abbot of St. Mary, by reason of his Weakness and continual Distempers, he published certain Ordinances relating to Church-Discipline, more especially about the Celebration of the Eucharist. The Synod of York in 1195.

The First imports, That the salutary Host, being the most excellent of the Sacraments, the Priest ought to use all possible Diligence and Application, to the end that it may be consecrated with Humility, received with Fear, and distributed with Reverence: That it is requisite that the Minister of the Altar be sure that he offer Bread and Wine with the Water in the Sacrifice; and that he cannot celebrate the Mass, unless he have a Minister who is endu'd with some measure of Knowledge: That care ought to be taken to keep the Host in a neat Box, to renew it every Sunday, and to carry it to the Sick in a Clerical Habit, and with Discretion.

The Second, enjoins the Arch-deacons to take care that the Canon of the Mass, which he calls Secretum Missæ, be very correct.

The

The Third, forbids Priests to oblige Laicks to cause a certain Number of Masses to be said in stead of Penance, or to make Bargains for the price of Masses.

The Fourth, contains a Prohibition to require more than Three Persons to stand as Sureties for a Child at the Baptifmal Font; that is to say, Two God-fathers and One God-mother, when it is a Boy; or Two God-mothers and One God-father, if it be a Girl: Deacons are likewise forbidden to Baptize, except in a Case of very great Extremity, or to administer the Eucharist, or Penance; but Priests are enjoin'd to go readily whenever they are sent for to baptize Children, or to give the Holy Communion to sick Persons.

The Fifth, provides for the keeping of Churches, and their Ornaments, in good repair; and ordains, That the Eucharist shall be consecrated in a Silver-Chalice, in those Churches that have means to procure one.

The Sixth imports, That the Clergy-men, who have receiv'd the Crown from the Hands of the Bishop, shall have Tonfure with it; but if they neglect to observe this Ordinance, they shall be compell'd to do it by the Forfeiture of their Benefices; and they who have receiv'd neither, by the order of the Arch-deacon or Deans. He recommends to Priests the wearing of Habits suitable to their Profession.

Sy the Seventh it is enjoin'd, That Ecclesiastical Justice shall be administer'd Gratis.

The Eighth, ordains the payment of Tithes without any diminution.

The Ninth, prohibits Monks to take Offices or Licences from their Superiors to farm, and to travel or to go out of their Monastery without a just Cause, and without a Companion: As for the Nuns, they are likewise forbidden to go out of their Convents, unless accompanied with their Abbesses or Priores.

The Tenth, forbids the letting out of Tithes to farm to Laicks, although they were associated with a Clergy-man.

The Eleventh ordains, That the Curates shall publish thrice a Year the Excommunication against Perjur'd Persons with extinguished Candles, and shall denounce them excommunicated every Sunday. This Case is reserv'd to the Archbishop, to the Bishop, or to the Grand Penitentiary.

The Twelfth, renews the Prohibitions so often made, That Clergy-men should keep unchast Correspondence with Women, and regulates the manner of trying those who are accus'd of that Crime.

The Council of Montpellier held in the Year 1195.

The Council of Montpellier 1195.

MICHAEL, Legate of the See of Rome, passing over to Spain A. D. 1195, upon occasion of an inroad which the Saracens had made against the Christians in the Territories of his most Catholick Majesty, who was oblig'd to retire to those of the King of France; held a Council of the Bishops of the Province of Narbonne at Montpellier, in which he reviv'd and published many Decrees of the latter Councils and Popes; amongst others, some about Peace and Truce; against Robbers and Pirates; concerning Ecclesiastical Jurisdiction, and the Prohibition to lay Taxes on Churches; against Usurers; about the Habits and Manners of the Clergy; the Frugality to be observ'd by Bishops in keeping their Tables, &c. He leaves the Archbishop of Narbonne, and his Suffragan Bishops, at liberty to denounce Ecclesiastical Censures against the Infringers of these Ordinances, or to supersede them, accordingly as they shall judge most expedient, lest the Hereticks should take an occasion from a general Suspension of long continuance, to pervert the Faithful, and to corrupt their Principles.

CHAP. XX.

Observations on the Ecclesiastical Affairs of the Twelfth Century.

THE Illustrations that we have inserted in the Body of this Work, as to the most important Ecclesiastical Affairs of the Twelfth Century, may serve to supersede any farther Pains that might be expected here, in making several Remarks on the Doctrine and Discipline of that Age. For, as to the original and progress of Scholastick Divinity, recourse may be had to what we have said in the XV Chapter. As to the manner of explaining the Holy Scriptures, Scriptures, it would be requisite to consult the Observations made in Chap. XVI. And as to the Reception of Gratian's Decretal, only to peruse what has been related in Chap. XVII. Neither is it necessary to enlarge on the Heresies and Errors which appear'd in the Church in those Times, or on the Doctrines that were established against them, since we have already treated of them in particular Chapters. Indeed the Affair of the Investitures might supply us with some Reflections, if we had not discours'd at large on that subject in the Second Chapter; so that nothing more remains to be said, concerning the Schisms of the Popes, and the Contests they had with the Emperors and Kings, which rent the Church, and occasion'd innumerable Calamities. I shall only observe here, That these Dissensions were so far from diminishing the Power of the Popes, that they serv'd even to corroborate and augment it: For it was in this Century, that they established their Sovereignty in Rome, and their Independency of the Emperor, and even assum'd to themselves a Right of conferring the Imperial Crown: They extended their Jurisdiction and Authority over the Churches farther than they had hitherto done, and met with much less Opposition in their Attempts than in former Times. The most part of the Councils were call'd either by them; or by their Legates, and they were the Authors of the Constitutions that were made therein, and to which the Bishops scarce did any Thing else but give their Consent. Appeals to the Pope in all sorts of Causes, and in favour of all sorts of Persons, were become so frequent, that no Affair was transacted, the Determination of which was not immediately referr'd to the Court of Rome; which oblig'd those Persons, who had any Zeal for the maintaining of Church-Discipline, and among others St. Bernard, publickly to complain of the Abuse. And indeed, they were constrain'd to find out some means to prevent it, in the Third General Council of Lateran, by forbidding Appeals that were enter'd before the Sentence was pronounced, and by ordaining that the Appellants should be oblig'd to prosecute them within a limited Time.

Of the Authority of the Pope.

The Discipline of the Church was likewise weaken'd by the frequent use of Dispensations, which were granted at Rome, with so much facility, that that Abuse is esteem'd by St. Bernard as one of the most notorious Disorders that ever happen'd in the Church. The Popes had a very great share in the Collating of Bishopricks: For although the Bishops were then chosen by the Clergy, and ordain'd by the Metropolitan; nevertheless the Decision of the Differences that arose about the Validity of the Election, being of necessity referr'd to the Consistory of Rome, the Popes had an absolute Power to favour whom they should think fit; and if the Metropolitan refus'd to ordain him; whose Election was approv'd by them, they were in a Capacity to ordain him themselves. Sometimes they sent a Legate to assist on their behalf in the Election, where certain Persons were recommended to the Electors, or to the Patrons of the Benefices, and it would be difficult to have no regard to such Recommendations. The Elections of the Popes were reserv'd solely and wholly to the Cardinals, whose Dignity was advanced to such a degree of Height, that they were not only reputed to be superior to Bishops, but also to Patriarchs and Primate. These Cardinals were then chosen indifferently out of all Nations, and France produced above Fifty in that Age.

The Manners of the Clergy were more regular in this Century than in the Two preceeding; inasmuch that Simonical Practices, and other Enormities were not committed by Ecclesiastical Persons, neither so frequently, nor so publickly: It was forbidden to exact any Thing for the Administration of the Sacraments, for Ordination, or for the Collation of Benefices; yet this was practis'd at Rome, and elsewhere, under divers Pretences. Hitherto it was strictly prohibited, that they who were in Orders should marry; nevertheless when they did so, they were not divorced from their Wives; but only were degraded, turn'd out of the Clergy, or put to Penance: 'Twas only in this Century, that these Marriages were declar'd null, and that those Persons who had contracted them were constrain'd to be divorced; at least the first Ordinance which imports such an Injunction, is that of the First General Council of Lateran. The Constitution which excluded the illegitimate Sons of the Priests from the Clergy, was generally receiv'd, and many were enacted to prevent the Continuance of Spiritual Livings in Families, as it were a peculiar Inheritance. The Clergy-men us'd their utmost Efforts to exempt their Persons and Estates from the Jurisdiction of the Secular Powers, and the Bishops, who as yet were wont to administer Ecclesiastical Justice personally, began to have Officials, whose Name and Functions were unknown till that time: They likewise communicated their Episcopal Authority to Deans and Curates; which Custom was forbidden by the Third General Council of Lateran: They excommunicated or suspended the Laicks, who usurped or retain'd the Revenues belonging to the Church, or who meddled with the disposal of Spiritual Livings: However they themselves sometimes bestow'd Altars, that is to say, Benefices on Lay-men to enjoy the Revenues of them for a time; and these sorts of Benefices were call'd Personats: This Custom prevail'd in like manner amongst the Eastern Churches, where the Emperors and Patriarchs granted the Revenues of certain Monasteries to Laicks. The Visitations of the Ordinaries became so very chargeable to the Curates, that there was a Necessity of regulating their Retinue. Lastly, all the Bishops were oblig'd to have in their Cathedrals a Person capable of teaching the Arts and Sciences, and Univerfities began to be form'd in the great Cities; amongst which those of Paris and Bononia were the most Famous; the former for the study of Divinity, and the other for that of the Civil Law.

The Doctrine of the Sacraments was reduced in form of a methodical System in this Age, and Observations on the Discipline of the Sacraments. Divers Questions were discuss'd on that Subject, which never were started before. We shall not at present insist on them, but only observe certain particular Points of Discipline: The Administration of Baptism, even that of Infants, was reserv'd for solemn Days; but Parents were not allow'd to assist at that of their Children, and the triple Immersion was still in use. The Custom of publick Penance for publick Offences was not entirely abolish'd; but it was very seldom put in practice, by reason that Remission of Sins must be obtain'd by other means, more especially by Crusades and Pilgrimages. The granting of Absolution for certain Crimes began to be reserv'd to the Pope, and the Bishops: At First, the Species of a Sin in general was not reserv'd, but a particular Action which appear'd to be enormous; and afterwards the Offence of those Persons, who abus'd Clergy-men, was generally referr'd to the Pope's Cognizance. Publick Confessions at the point of Death were likewise in use; but the Benefit of Absolution, and of the Communion, was deny'd, at least in France, to Malefactors condemn'd to Death: Persons who were in Distress, out of a Principle of Devotion, often caus'd themselves to be laid on Asses, having their Bodies cover'd with a Hair-cloth, or cloathed in the Habit of a Monk: Voluntary Mortifications, such as the Penitential Shirt, the Hair-cloth, and the Scourging Discipline which Penitents gave themselves, or caus'd to be given by others, were very much us'd in those Times: They were wont to eat only once a Day, on the Days of Abstinence; but they began to break their Fast at the Hour of * None in Lent, and at Noon at another time: Fridays Fast was observ'd more regularly than that on Saturdays. The Participation of the Eucharist under both Kinds was customary during the whole Century; although in the beginning of it some took the Two Species both together, by steeping that of the Bread in that of the Wine, and in the end of the same Century, some took only one. The Term of Transubstantiation was then us'd by certain Writers, to express the Change of the Elements of Bread and Wine into the Body and Blood of Jesus Christ. Then also the Priests receiv'd Alms for their Masses, but it was forbidden to demand any; and although they offer'd the Sacrifice for certain Persons in particular, yet it was not doubted but that it was offer'd by them at the same time for all the Faithful; to which purpose see a remarkable Passage of Arnulphus of Lisieux, which we have related in the Account of the Works of that Prelate. Constitutions were published about the time, during which the Hosts might be kept; but the Ordinations, and even the Consecrations made by Schismatics, or by Hereticks, were reputed to be void, and of none effect.

Remarks on the Mo-
Life.

To say somewhat in like manner concerning the Monastick State, we shall observe that the Benediction of Monks, which was first introduced in the Eastern, and afterwards in the Western Churches, became as it were necessary, and that an express Profession was enjoy'd, which till then was never requir'd. This Benediction was usually given by a Bishop, or by an Abbot; nevertheless a simple Monk might also perform the Ceremony, and it was not forbidden to be reiterated: When a Monk was made Abbot, he receiv'd the Benediction from his Diocesan; yet such Benediction was not judg'd absolutely necessary. It appears that it was customary in those Times, both in the Levant, and in the Western Countries, that the Monasteries should receive Money or Goods of those Persons, who were to be admitted into them; but that it was prohibited to exact any Thing on that account. The Cistercian Order, which was small and poor in the beginning, soon became so Numerous and Rich, that it gave some cause of Jealousy to that of Cluny, and to all the other Black Friars. There arose several Contests betwixt them, as well by reason of the Difference of their Customs, as upon account of Temporal Interests, and more especially, because the Cistercian Monks receiv'd those of the Order of Cluny, who were desirous to pass over to them: It likewise fell out sometimes, that the Cistercians retir'd to Cluny, and were there entertain'd; but they procur'd a Dispensation from the Pope for that purpose, and it does not appear, that those of Cluny, who went to Cisteaux, observ'd the same Formality. This Custom of passing thus from an Order of a moderate, to another of a more austere Discipline, began to be introduced in the Twelfth Century. The greatest part of the Monasteries obtain'd Exemptions of the Popes to withdraw themselves from the Bishop's jurisdiction; an Abuse that was condemn'd by St. Bernard, and which the Prelates were afterwards oblig'd to restrain in the Third General Council of Lateran. Some considerable Abbots were permitted by the Pope to wear the Episcopal Ornaments; viz. the Mitre, the Dalmatick, the Gloves, the Sandals, and even the Crozier: Although those who were of a more moderate Temper disliked this Custom; nevertheless it became so frequent, that many Abbots usurp'd that Right, without any Licence from the Pope; and it was necessary that the Third General Council of Lateran should forbid it them, as well as the simple Monks, who were not in Orders, the wearing of Maniples. Monks were likewise prohibited, in the First General Council of Lateran, to administer the Sacraments, and to exercise any of the Functions of Curates; but this Prohibition did not hinder, but that many were taken out of Monasteries to be made Bishops and Cardinals. It was also very Customary for Bishops to retire in the end of their Life into Monasteries, and having spent the remainder of their Days in pious Exercises, to die in those Places of retreat. The Order of Grandmont was founded in the beginning of the Century, by Stephen Muret; this Society being compos'd of Hermits dwelling in little Cells, which were separated and shut up within the same Inclosure: The Rule which he enjoy'd them to follow, was very judiciously compos'd, and approv'd of by the Popes, Urban III. and Clement III. It is also affirm'd, That the Order of the Carmelites began to be established in the Year 1121. by certain Hermits of Mount Carmel, whom the Patriarch of Antioch got together to form a Religious Society: They were Lay-men, who were wont to say the Office of the Virgin Mary, and were oblig'd to no other Vow but that of Obedience.

Regular
Canons.

The Regular Canons were employ'd in administering the Sacraments, and in exercising the Functions of Curates, when they were authoriz'd to that purpose, by their Bishops: But some Prelates made a Scruple to admit them to such Employments, and the Regular Canons themselves were not very willing to be taken off from their Solitary Life. At that time there arose a kind

kind of Contrast between them, and the Monks, about the Preeminence and Dignity of their Stations : The Order of Regular Canons was augmented by a new Congregation, of which St. Norbert was the Founder, A. D. 1120. They were call'd Canonici Tunicati, by reason of their Habit, whereas those who bore the Name of St. Augustin were styled Superpelliceati.

With these Regular Canons may be join'd the Military Orders, which became very numerous in that Century, and were under the same Conduct and Rule : The most Ancient were those of St. John of Jerusalem, or the Knights Hospitallers, instituted in the beginning of the Century, to entertain the Pilgrims who were travelling to that City. The Second, are the Knights Templars, who had their Institution in the Year 1118. and whose Office it was to provide for the Safety of the Pilgrims, by encountering those who disturb'd them in their Journey. The Knights of the Teutonic Order, who profess'd to perform both these Employments, were established some time after. Lastly, in imitation of these Orders, those of St. James, and of Calatrava, were instituted in Spain, for the Pilgrimages of St. James in Galicia, and some others, in other Countries.
